Limehouse Ware Revealed David Drakard,1993 Porcelain Analysis and Its Role in the Forensic Attribution of Ceramic Specimens Howell G. M. Edwards,2021-11-09 The material for this book arose from the author s research into porcelains over many years as a collector in appreciation of their artistic beauty as an analytical chemist in the scientific interrogation of their body paste enamel pigments and glaze compositions and as a ceramic historian in the assessment of their manufactory foundations and their correlation with available documentation relating to their recipes and formulations A discussion of the role of analysis in the framework of a holistic assessment of artworks and specifically the composition of porcelain namely hard paste soft paste phosphatic bone china and magnesian is followed by its growth from its beginnings in China to its importation into Europe in the 16th Century A survey of European porcelain manufactories in the 17th and 18th Centuries is followed by a description of the raw materials minerals and recipes for porcelain manufacture and details of the chemistry of the high temperature firing processes involved therein The historical backgrounds to several important European factories are considered highlighting the imperfections in the written record that have been perpetuated through the ages The analytical chemical information derived from the interrogation of specimens from fragments shards or perfect finished items is reviewed and operational protocols established for the identification of a factory output from the data presented Several case studies are examined in detail across several porcelain manufactories to indicate the role adopted by modern analytical science with information provided at the quantitative elemental oxide and qualitative molecular spectroscopic levels where applicable The attribution of a specimen to a particular factory is either supported thereby or in some cases a potential reassessment of an earlier attribution is indicated Overall the information provided by analytical chemical data is seen to be extremely useful for porcelain identification and for its potential attribution in the context of a holistic forensic evaluation of hitherto unknown porcelain exemplars of questionable factory origins 18th and 19th Century Porcelain Analysis Howell G. M. Edwards,2020-07-13 This book addresses the contributions made by analytical chemistry to the characterisation of 18th and early 19th Century English and Welsh porcelains commencing with the earliest reports of Sir Arthur Church and of Herbert Eccles and Bernard Rackham using chemical digestion techniques and concluding with the most recent instrumental experiments which together span more than a hundred years of study From the earliest experiments which required necessarily the sacrifice of significant portions of each specimen which may already have been damaged to the latest experiments which needed only microsampling or the non destructive interrogation of valuable perfect specimens a comprehensive survey is undertaken of more than twenty manufactories of quality porcelains The correlation is made between the quantitative elemental oxide determinations of the scanning electron microscopic diffraction and Xray fluorescence data and the qualitative molecular spectroscopic Raman data to demonstrate their complementarity and use in the holistic forensic assessment of the origin of the fired porcelains this will form the groundwork for the adoption of analytical techniques for the attribution of unknown or questionable porcelains to their potential source factories The book will also examine the perception of what constitutes a porcelain and its definitions and examines the assignment of porcelains to types which currently employs the definitions of hard paste soft paste hybrid magnesian and bone china from the conclusions derived from the analytical data and a consideration of the raw materials employed in their manufacturing processes During the discussion of this analytical evidence several themes and protocols have been established for its utilisation in the potential identification of porcelains and several case studies undertaken for this purpose are cited The book will be of interest to analytical scientists to museum ceramics curators and to ceramics historians

Blue by Fire: A Marker of the Technical History of Glass and Ceramics Howell G. M. Edwards, Philippe Colomban, 2025-01-27 The use of natural mineral and synthetic blue pigments in antiquity for wall paintings and illuminated manuscript historiography evolved into the most suitable blue pigments for the decoration of glazed and enamelled wares ceramics glass and metal which required a stability at the high temperatures of the kilns used for glazing and firing Historic literature is often vague regarding the blue pigments used for this purpose The generic term cobalt blue covers a wide range of pigments that were actually used for the decoration of faience majolica stonewares earthenwares and porcelains This book addresses the application of elemental and molecular spectroscopic analytical techniques to a range of diverse problems which arise for decorated ceramics glass and enamels and related artefacts a history of techniques provenance and authentication The text contains an introduction to the important analytical techniques that are used in destructive and nondestructive analytical measurements and highlights potential future applications based upon novel miniaturised instrumentation for in situ studies The book is co authored by two international experts with many years experience in the application of analysis to artworks and archaeological artefacts and in the investigation of materials and sites for cultural heritage preservation Among 19 chapters one is devoted to an evaluation of the analytical techniques that are used and the pitfalls which can arise in the interpretation of the data The approach conveys the detailed information which has become available from the adoption of analytical techniques to diverse problems through the scientific interrogation of ceramic and related artefacts Examples are given of how the pigment analysis and sourcing can provide unique information about ancient trade routes and pigment sourcing historically A classic instance is provided by the transfer of European enamelling technologies carried out at the beginning of the 17th century in Japan Arita and at the turn of the 17th 18th centuries in China by the Jesuits established at the Court of respectively the Kyushu island of Dejima and the Chinese Qing Emperor Kangxi It has hence been demonstrated that some of the most beautiful porcelains emanating from Japan and China in this period incorporate blue decoration with pigments supplied from Europe The interpretation of the analytical data can assist museum curators archaeologists art dealers experts and cultural heritage historians in the preservation and conservation of ancient materials which have applied blue pigment decoration Science and Civilisation in China Joseph Needham, Rose Kerr, Nigel Wood, 2004 Landscape History , 1999 Made in Liverpool E. Mason, 2004 The glazed ceramics produced in the Islamic world are of tremendous importance to the fields of art history archaeology and the history of technology Unfortunately their study has been beset by three major problems Firstly problems existed with the chronological and typological ordering of the various types particularly in the relationship between different regions Secondly debilitating problems existed regarding the identification of centres of production for these wares Although there is some documentary and archaeological evidence it has not been enough in the overwhelming majority of cases to link ceramic types to particular centres with any certainty Thirdly technical studies of these wares have previously focused on a few types while most important technological questions have gone unanswered Such questions include the origins of tin opacified glazes stonepaste bodies underglaze painting and other techniques This study is aimed at approaching these three problems focusing on the period from the beginning of the Islamic period up until about 1250 Three chief methodologies have been used Standard archaeological approaches to pottery classification are used to create a seriated ceramic typology including study of forms and motif assemblages BOOK JACKET Title Summary field provided by Blackwell North America Inc All Rights Reserved Planning , 2006 Old and New Worlds Geoff Egan, Ronald L. Michael, 1999 Even before the Mayflower sailed across the Atlantic in 1620 the material and cultural lives of the Old and New worlds were inextricably linked This book reflects the techniques which archaeologists have used over the last 30 years to try and unravel from a mass of material evidence the lives of early Americans and their English contemporaries This book discusses the unique methodologies which historical archaeologists in both Britain and the US have developed to study early modern and industrial societies and new theoretical approaches focusing on ethnicity and domestic space and new practical techniques using environmental as well as artifactual evidence The book contains forty two essays arranged thematically Five are concerned with the use and interpretation of evidence thirteen describe settlements and their communities on both sides of the Atlantic four are on nautical and military operations thirteen are concerned with artefacts and pottery and their manufacture and distribution and seven use environmental evidence to throw new light on the human populations and the plant and animal worlds of the time

The Archaeology of Greater London Trevor Brigham, 2000 It is nearly 25 years since the last major survey of the archaeology of the London region was written In that quarter century some of the most extraordinary evidence of our past has come to light a 9 000 year old hunting camp in Uxbridge a 2 mile long prehistoric bank and ditch cursus monument at Stanwell the spectacular Roman heart of the City the Saxon trading emporium on the Strand the largest medieval cemetery excavated in Europe at Spitalfields and Shakespeare s Rose Theatre at Bankside This book completed with the substantial support of English Heritage and the City of London Archaeological Trust represents the latest and most comprehensive attempt to place these treasures in their context It also draws together the knowledge of specialists and experts to provide a framework within which future archaeological discoveries and research may be considered The result is an accessible and fascinating insight into the rich diversity of human experience that has combined over the last half million years into the metropolis of Greater London today The Archaeology of Greater London is presented in 10 period based chapters with 13 accompanying full colour maps and an extensive bibliography and gazetteer of sites and finds
