Hertz, 2018-10-16 A brief cogent analysis of gentrification in Chicago An incisive and useful narrative on the puzzle of urban development Kirkus In the years after World War II a movement began to bring the middle class back to the Lincoln Park neighborhood on Chicago's North Side In place of the old poorly maintained apartments and dense streetscapes rehabbers imagined a new kind of neighborhood a modern community that combined the convenience diversity and character of a historic urban quarter with the prosperity and privileges of a new subdivision But as property values rose longtime residents found themselves being evicted to make room for progress and they began to assert their own ideas about the future of Lincoln Park As divisions deepened over the course of the 1960s debate gave way to increasingly violent demonstrations Each camp became further entrenched as they tried to settle the eternal questions of city planning Who is a neighborhood for And who gets to decide
