

LINCOLN'S LEGACY OF INSPIRATION

These papers were originally printed in the New York Times, February 1st to 7th, 1909, and formed the basis of a prize competition among the school children of New York and vicinity, in honor of the hundredth anniversary of Lincoln's birth. By the terms of the contest each competitor was required to write a composition grounded exclusively on those essays which aroused unusual interest from the moment of their appearance and attracted increasing attention with every hour.

Fifty-five thousand compositions based upon these were submitted to the Times by the students in the public and private schools in New York City alone, and it is estimated that no less than twenty-five thousand were written while the original studies herein presented were widely read by the general public throughout the country.

In Philadelphia a similar contest was held under the auspices of the Ledger, and there five thousand compositions were actually submitted by the students, and probably double that number were written.

Frederick Trevor Hill, 1928 Lincoln in American Memory Merrill D. Peterson, 1995-06-01 Lincoln's death like his life was an event of epic proportions. When the president was struck down at his moment of triumph, writes Merrill Peterson, sorrow indescribable swept the nation. After lying in state in Washington, Lincoln's body was carried by a special funeral train to Springfield, Illinois, stopping in major cities along the way; perhaps a million people viewed the remains as memorial orations rang out and the world chorused its sincere condolences. It was the apotheosis of the martyred President, the beginning of the transformation of a man into a mythic hero. In Lincoln in American Memory, historian Merrill Peterson provides a fascinating history of Lincoln's place in the American imagination from the hour of his death to the present. In tracing the changing image of Lincoln through time, this wide-ranging account offers insight into the evolution and struggles of American politics and society and into the character of Lincoln himself. Westerners, Easterners, even Southerners were caught up in the idealization of the late President, reshaping his memory and laying claim to his mantle as his widow, son, memorial builders, and memorabilia collectors fought over his visible legacy. Peterson also looks at the complex responses of blacks to the memory of Lincoln as they moved from exultation at the end of slavery to the harsh reality of free life amid deep poverty and segregation. At more than one memorial event for the great emancipator, the author notes, blacks were excluded. He makes an engaging examination of the flood of reminiscences and biographies from Lincoln's old law partner William H. Herndon to Carl Sandburg and beyond. Serious historians were late in coming to the topic; for decades, the myth makers sought to shape the image of the hero President to suit their own agendas. He was made a voice of prohibition, a saloon keeper, an infidel, a devout Christian, the first Bull Moose Progressive, a military blunderer, and after the First World War, a military genius, a white supremacist according to D. W. Griffith and other Southern admirers, and a touchstone for the civil rights movement. Through it all, Peterson traces five principal images of Lincoln: the savior of the Union, the great emancipator, man of the people, first American, and self-made man. In identifying these archetypes, he tells us much not only of Lincoln but of our own identity as a people.
