

OLDER PEOPLE LIVING WITH HIV

Three decades ago, people who were diagnosed with HIV could expect to live only one to two years after their diagnosis. They were more focused on if, when, and how they would die, rather than how they were going to live.

People living with the disease were not focused on—or prepared for—what life would look like even a handful of years ahead. Neither were the doctors, care providers, or government programs serving them. Today, older people (age 50+) living with HIV are a growing population with pronounced needs.

The Aging of the Epidemic

According to the latest CDC Surveillance Report from 2017, nearly 50 percent of people living with HIV in the United States are 50 or older. People 50 and older also accounted for 17 percent of new HIV diagnoses in 2017.

Research indicates that older Americans are more likely than younger Americans to be diagnosed with HIV late in the course of their disease, meaning they are more likely to be dually diagnosed with HIV and AIDS. This late diagnosis and the consequent late access to treatment results in more and more severe health complications. This can lead to poorer prognoses and shorter survival rates after diagnosis.

Pronounced Health Challenges

The U.S. Department of Health & Human Services (HHS) reports that those living with HIV for many years exhibit many clinical characteristics commonly observed in aging, including multiple chronic diseases or conditions, the use of multiple medications, changes in physical and cognitive abilities, and increased vulnerability to stressors. While effective treatments have decreased the likelihood of AIDS-defining illnesses, such HIV-associated non-AIDS conditions are more common in individuals with long-standing HIV infection.

Poverty and Social Isolation

Upon diagnosis, most didn't expect that they would live to see another year. Many cashed in their savings, retirement plans, and life insurance policies to pay for their immediate health needs. As the groundbreaking San Francisco Chronicle project "Last Men Standing" helps to illuminate, many long-term survivors are living lives they didn't plan or prepare to live.

Long-term survivors have relied for decades on government-funded disability programs. And now,

HIV/AIDS and Older Adults Charles A. Emlet, MSW, PhD, 2004-03-31 This volume focuses on the ways in which HIV AIDS can affect older adults The chapters in this book discuss the variety of HIV AIDS problems that we face at the individual family and community levels Topics examined include demographics and epidemiological aspects of HIV disease with this population prevention of HIV disease issues impacting individuals in a medical psychological and social context and service needs Originally published as a special issue of the Journal of Mental Health and Aging the volume contains new chapters on demographics HIV prevention and education and effective coalition building among systems of care Contributors include Diane Zablotsky Michael Kennedy Janice Nichols and Timothy Heckman among others For Further Information Please Click Here

Aging with HIV Janice E. Nichols, David C. Speer, Betty J. Watson, Mary Watson, Tiffany L. Vergon, Colette M. Vallee, Joan M. Meah, 2002-09-15 In 1998 approximately 30 million people worldwide were living with HIV AIDS about 5 million of whom became infected that year The epidemic continues to expand with an estimated doubling time of 10 years making AIDS the leading infectious cause of death ahead of tuberculosis and malaria Even in the U S A where the death rate from AIDS is declining as a result of effective drug therapies HIV infection rates continue to climb in several population groups The prevalence of AIDS among people over the age of 50 is steadily increasing and most older people are unprepared to address it for a number of reasons including the widespread discomfort with matters sexual and homosexual and the belief that elderly people are not sexually active and therefore not at risk This guide for care providers seeks to educate and inform readers about the difficulties and complications that accompany the disease in older people Thus while the appendix includes technical descriptions of methodology data and results the narratives in the chapters describing the findings and their practical implications are written in layman s language Topics covered include biomedical aspects demographics sexuality stressors mental health older women and patient care all of which are supported by case studies

Aging and Health in Africa Pranitha Maharaj,2012-08-16 Population aging is a matter of global concern It often occurs in tandem with changes in the health profile of the population In Africa many countries are already facing a high burden of communicable diseases However as more and more children survive childhood and move on to adult years and old age they are also more likely to experience health problems associated with the aging process Population aging in Africa is occurring in the context of high levels of poverty changing family structures an immense disease burden fragile health systems and weak or poorly managed government institutions This book shows that aging is likely to lead to increased social and economic demands for the continent However most national governments in Africa have not begun to address the issue of how to respond effectively to the needs of the older population This will require a better understanding of the socio economic and demographic situation of the older population in Africa This book fills the gaps that exist by exploring the social realities of population aging in Africa

It also focuses on the policy and programmatic responses gaps and future challenges related to aging across the continent
