

four years (1935-1939). In other words, since 1856, the Republicans have held sway for 80 years, the Democrats for eight and the Progressives for four. In 1856, John C. Fremont ran as the first Republican candidate for President. From that time on through 1928, the Republicans carried the state at all presidential elections except two: that of 1892 when Cleveland defeated Harrison by a very small margin; that of 1912 when Woodrow Wilson won out because the Republican vote was divided between Taft and Theodore Roosevelt. Franklin D. Roosevelt carried the state in 1932, 1936 and 1940; the Republicans under Dewey had a majority in the election of 1944.

One should not hastily assume, however, because of the domination of the state by the Republican Party for so long that the Democratic Party was of small importance. The presidential elections, the membership in the state legislature and the make-up of the Wisconsin delegation to the federal Congress, all indicate, at least until about 1920, that from 35 to 45 per cent of Wisconsin voters normally preferred the Democratic Party. We are so accustomed nowadays to venerating Abraham Lincoln that it comes almost as a shock to find that over 40 per cent of Wisconsin people voted for Stephen A. Douglas in 1860; 44 per cent for McClellan in 1864. Lincoln failed to carry Outagamie County in either election.

Without doubt Robert M. La Follette is the greatest political figure that has yet appeared in the history of the state. By the time he reached mid-career he was known throughout the nation as a champion of the common man against the undue influence in government of men of great wealth. As governor (1901-1906) he carried out reforms pretty generally opposed by capitalists and big business. During the last 19 years of his life he was in the United States Senate. In 1911 and 1912 he was a leader in the Progressive movement, and he hoped for a time to receive Republican nomination for the presidency; but the party split and Theo-
