

Graham Greene

- As a writer Greene was very prolific and versatile. Many of his novels are based on his own experiences as an agent in the British Foreign Office. The Asian settings also stimulated Greene's many novels. He wrote 5 dramas and screenplays for several films based on his novels. Greene's film reviews are still worth reading and often better than the film he praised or slashed. Although Greene knew that some critics considered his novels entertainment, his own models were Henry James, Joseph Conrad, and Ford Madox Ford. In his personal library was a large collection of James's work.
