

JOHN HENRY

Tracking Down a Negro Legend

John Henry is the Paul Bunyan of the South, the "natural man" who "died with his hammer in his hand." Was he man or myth? No one really knows. Did he actually win a race with a steam drill while driving steel in Big Ben Tunnel? Maybe. But whether he lived or was simply the Negro's fabrication of the superhuman hero, the legends about him make fascinating reading, and the ballads that have sprung up about his career are some of the richest in Negro lore. The author is already well known for his previous work in collaboration with Howard W. Odum on the folk song of the Negro.
