Indigenous Peoples, Title to Territory, Rights and Resources Cathal M. Doyle, 2014-11-20 The right of indigenous peoples under international human rights law to give or withhold their Free Prior and Informed Consent (FPIC) to natural resource extraction in their territories is increasingly recognized by intergovernmental organizations international bodies and industry actors as well as in the domestic law of some States. This book offers a comprehensive overview of the historical basis and status of the requirement for indigenous peoples consent under international law examining its relationship with debates and practice pertaining to the acquisition of title to territory throughout the colonial era. Cathal Doyle examines the evolution of the contemporary concept of FPIC and the main challenges and debates associated with its recognition and implementation. Drawing on existing jurisprudence and evolving international standards policies and practices Doyle argues that FPIC constitutes an emerging norm of international law which is derived from indigenous peoples self determination territorial and cultural rights and is fundamental to their realization. This rights consistent version of FPIC guarantees that the responses to questions and challenges posed by the extractive industry's increasingly pervasive reach will be provided by indigenous peoples themselves. The book will be of great interest and value to students and researchers of public international law and indigenous peoples and human rights.

The United States and Non-self-governing Territories United States. Department of State, 1947 Forest governance by indigenous and tribal peoples Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, Fund for the Development of the Indigenous Peoples of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2021-03-25 The document summarizes the report that based on a review of more than 250 studies demonstrates the importance and urgency of climate action to protect the forests of the indigenous and tribal territories of Latin America as well as the indigenous and tribal peoples who protect them. These territories contain about a third of the continent's forests. That's 14% of the carbon stored in tropical forests.

around the world These territories are also home to an enormous diversity of wild fauna and flora and play a key role in stabilizing the local and regional climate Based on an analysis of the approaches that have proven effective in recent decades a set of investments and policies is proposed for adoption by climate funders and government decision makers in collaboration with indigenous and tribal peoples These measures are grouped into five main categories i strengthening of collective territorial rights ii compensate indigenous and tribal communities for the environmental services they provide iii facilitate community forest management iv revitalize traditional cultures and knowledge and v strengthen territorial governance and indigenous and tribal organizations Preliminary analysis suggests that these investments could significantly reduce expected carbon emissions at a low cost in addition to offering many other environmental and social benefits
