Dear Marty,

Thank you for the chance to read and comment on your novel. Completing a book manuscript is a big achievement! This story shows that you can develop a dramatic plot and appealing teen characters. The plot suits your target YA audience by exploring issues that matter to teens—friendships, coping with changes, and growing more independent.

In this critique, I looked at the content (what you wrote), writing style (how you wrote it), and mechanics (e. g. grammar, spelling, punctuation). Let's consider several major fiction elements, including settings (time and place), viewpoint, characterization, plotting, dialogue, pacing, chapter development, and themes, followed by style and mechanics.

Setting: Your story begins with a clear time and place. We see Kim near a bus stop shortly after 10 a.m. on a Saturday in late September. You also 'set up' the situation—Kim is waiting for Shalya so they can go shopping together.

Introduction to Plot and Conflict: Background information reveals the girls' grade level and their long, close friendship. We see that Kim prefers doing things with Shalya, not alone. She's eager to talk to Shalya and wishes she'd hurry so they can enjoy the day. Trouble looms when Shalya arrives, not alone, but with a guy she invited on her own. This adds conflict early in the plot and gives readers something to wonder/worry about. A strong tool, conflict can "hook" readers and keep their interest. I've made notes about conflict throughout the story.

"Show; Don't Tell" (SDT): You can improve your opening scene and other scenes in your novel by using more SDT. Avoid making bland "fact" statements. Use words that help readers share the character's experience. Here are two examples from p. 1: Instead of writing "it was cold," in Paragraph #1, try something like this: "Brrr—what a chilly day for late September. Shivering, Kim zipped up her hoodie, wishing she'd worn a coat." And in Paragraph #5, instead of "Kim was confused," try: "Kim opened her mouth to speak, then bit her lip, trying to hide her confusion and disappointment."

Viewpoint: Your story has a clear main character (MC) in Kim—good job. We can see this in her story, and events unfold from her inside point of view (POV) most of the time. I marked places that go outside her POV. For example, on p. 1, Paragraph #4, Kim would not be noticing her own eye color or the color of her cheeks. Those are outside observations. You can also phrase things in ways that show an even stronger inside POV so readers feel like they are experiencing events along with Kim. We want readers to identify closely with the POV character by showing their thoughts, feelings, and perceptions. On p. 1, you could replace the last sentence in Paragraph #4 with something like this: "Just why was he here today with Shalya?" This shows Kim's thoughts and emotions in a more vivid, natural manner. Internal dialogue is another tool we use to intensify the MC's POV by showing her direct thoughts 'in the moment.' Here's one way to revise Sentence #4 in Paragraph #1: Come on, Shalya—hurry! Sprinkling italicized internal dialogue with care throughout your story can add variety and emotion. I marked other places where you can fine-tune the POV.

Graduate Education A Critique And A Program:

Graduate Education Oliver Cromwell Carmichael, 1961 The End of Composition Studies David W Smit, 2007-03-29
Setting forth an innovative new model for what it means to be a writing teacher in the era of writing across the curriculum
The End of Composition Studies urges a reconceptualization of graduate work in rhetoric and composition systematically critiques the limitations of current pedagogical practices at the postsecondary level and proposes a reorganization of all academic units David W Smit calls into question two major assumptions of the field that writing is a universal ability and that college level writing is foundational to advanced learning Instead Smit holds writing involves a wide range of knowledge and skill that cannot be learned solely in writing classes but must be acquired by immersion in various discourse communities in and out of academic settings The End of Composition Studies provides a compelling rhetoric and rationale for eliminating the field and reenvisioning the profession as truly interdisciplinary a change that is necessary in order to fulfill the needs and demands of students instructors administrators and our democratic society Proceedings of the Mining and Metallurgical Society of America Mining and Metallurgical Society of America, 1921 Some volumes include constitution by laws rules and list of officers and members Directory of Programs for Students at Risk Thomas Williams, 2014-05-22 This book summarizes over 40 programs which enhance the success of students at risk The emphases of these programs include individual students learning skills whole school improvement professional development and parent and family improvement Names and addresses of key people at each site are also included Research in Education , 1973 Bulletin , 1920

 Bulletin Mining and Metallurgical Society of America, 1920 A Silent Success Clifton Conrad, Jennifer Grant Haworth, Susan Bolyard Millar, 1993 Master's degrees have often been relegated to second class or consolation prize status by administrators and faculty in higher education But the first major study of master's education in more than thirty years recently made headlines by calling the degree the silent success of American higher education In a lead editorial about the study the Washington Post agreed that the master's degree is academia's secret weapon and an important bridge to the rest of the world In A Silent Success Clifton Conrad Jennifer Grant Haworth and Susan Bolyard Millar present the results of their ground breaking study of master s education in the United States Basing their discussion on interviews with nearly 800 people in a variety of fields the authors identify key decisions that shape master s experiences and develop a typology of master s programs In doing so they establish the surprising extent to which students program alumni faculty and employers value master s education They find widespread agreement about the positive outcomes of master s education refined analytical skills big picture perspectives connections between theory and practice and improved communication and professional skills A Silent Success concludes with a discussion of the characteristics of high quality programs and with specific recommendations for strengthening master s education The authors urge administrators to recognize the importance of master s education and terminal master s programs They call on state and federal policymakers to provide greater financial support for master s students particularly in fields such as nursing education and environmental studies They encourage employers to provide flexible and supportive leave policies as well as strong financial and in house support Finally they invite students themselves to shape their master s experiences by joining student organizations organizing colloquia and nurturing collaborative learning experiences Critical Issues in Higher Education Michael Kompf, Pamela M.

Denicolo, 2013-02-11 The ideas and papers in this volume primarily showcase the work of a group of new scholars who will lead the next generation of educational practice and inquiry While the topics explored are critical issues the ways in which these new scholars have chosen to address them illustrates the diversity of voice venue and value that has led them to present their work Education and what it means has entered a new era in which the primary focus on education for the sake of education is strained An educational free for all in the sense of a no holds barred fight seems in place as competition for market share effective branding exercises and movement towards a client based delivery of educational services on demand as demanded has been fuelled and compounded by litigation accreditation transfer credits and matters of patents copyrights ownership and monopoly The link between education and financial well being has been co opted as the key to personal success Unfortunately the degree pursuit often called the paper chase has become competitive for learners seeking scholarships awards and entry into graduate school This transition indicates movement from becoming well educated to employability potential paralleling much institutional retooling and sustenance of enhanced reputation and fiscal viability
