

Introduction

- Juvenile Delinquency refers to a variety of law-violating behaviours by youths.
- The nature of juvenile offenses is varied and can include anything from status offenses to murder.
- Overall, there are about 2 million juvenile arrests each year: 1 million are sent to juvenile court, about 500,000 are admitted to detention centres, and about 10,000 of these juveniles are sent to criminal court for further adjudication (Shoemaker & Wolfe, 2005).
- About 15% of forcible rapes are committed by male perpetrators under the age of 19 and about one-third of child molesters are juveniles (Finkelhor, Ormrod, & Chaffin, 2009).
- The general approach to youthful offenders within the justice system has been largely rehabilitative rather than punitive because:
 - Juvenile offenders are believed to be more malleable to behaviour change than adults, given their vulnerable developmental stage.
 - There is a greater hope that these offenders, whose early criminal career is more easily disrupted, will become productive members of society.
