contains numerous studies and reports on the Soviet economy Regional Household and Poverty Effects of Russia's Accession to the World Trade Organization Thomas Rutherford, 2008 Abstract This paper develops a seven region comparative static computable general equilibrium model of Russia to assess the impact of accession to the World Trade Organization on these seven regions the federal okrugs of Russia In order to assess poverty and distributional impacts the model includes ten households in each of the seven federal okrugs where household data are taken from the Household Budget Survey of Rosstat The model allows for foreign direct investment in business services and endogenous productivity effects from additional varieties of business services and goods which the analysis shows are crucial to the results National welfare gains are about 4 5 percent of gross domestic product in the model but in a constant returns to scale model they are only 0 1 percent All deciles of the population in all seven federal okrugs can be expected to significantly gain from Russian World Trade Organization accession but due to the capacity of their regions to attract foreign direct investment households in the Northwest region gain the most followed by households in the Far East and Volga regions Households in Siberia and the Urals gain the least Distribution impacts within regions are rather flat for the first nine deciles but the richest decile of the population in the three regions that attract a lot of foreign investment gains significantly more than the other nine representative households in those regions Annual Economic Indicators for the U. Union 1987 analyses the Soviet Union's limited success in improving local government between in the 1960s to 1980s as the country made a drive toward centralized policy control. It examines the institutional framework and changes in crucial policy areas and argues that a fragmented vertical power structure involving the three bureaucracies of Party ministries and the city and regional soviets was unproductive. It shows how group interests moulded and adapted policies and how the Party's initiative in centralizing policy was thwarted. It also outlines the significance of the industrial base in determining local budgets and the provision of amenities as opposed to overtly political factors. Research Guide to the Russian and Soviet Censuses Ralph S. Clem, 2016-11-01 Taken together the Russian census of 1897 and the Soviet censuses of 1926 1959 1970 and 1979 constitute the largest collection of empirical data available on that country but until the publication of this book in 1986 the daunting complexity of that material prevented Western scholars from exploiting the censuses fully. This book is both a guide to the use of and a detailed index to these censuses. The first part of the book consists of eight essays by specialist on the USSR six of them dealing with the use of census materials and the availability of data for research on ethnicity and language marriage and the family education and literacy migration and organization age structure and occupations. The second part a comprehensive index for all the published census presents more than six hundred annotated entries for the census tables a keyword index that enables researchers to find census data by subject and a list of political administrative units covered in each census. Hearings, 1962 Subnational Budgeting in Russia Lev M. Freinkman, Daniel Treisman, Stepan Titov, 1999-01-01 Not only are Russia's regions economically diverse but the policies that regional governments have adopted to deal with the strains of economic transition also vary widely. Some regions have generally embraced market reforms while others have sought to preserve enclaves of socialism with price restrictions large subsidies and barriers to trade. Reforms of Russia's budgetary system at the subnational level are vital to preserve macroeconomic stability improve the efficiency and accountability of government and enhance incentives for local and regional governments to vigorously support economic growth. Previous analytical and reform efforts have focused on possible changes at the federal level and in the system of center region relations. An opportunity now exists to make progress by providing reform advice and conditional aid to policymakers at the regional and subregional level. This report focuses on opportunities for reform at the subnational level. It reviews recent trends in fiscal adjustment budgeting and government debt at the regional and local levels in Russia. It analyzes major problems and suggests a number of measures and performance indicators that could form part of a reform strategy initiated by the Government of Russia. Transportation, Communications, and Electric Power in the USSR, 1959 This report presents unevaluated information selected from Russian language publications as indicated. It is produced and disseminated as an aid to United States Government research.
