Charming, lucidly written text covers everything from firescreens, curtained archways and Grandmother's cupboard to Tyrolian tables and chairs, a Dutch bedstead and a French bureau with fine brass mounts The House Beautiful; Essays on Beds and Tables, Stools and Candlesticks Clarence Cook, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1878 edition. Excerpt: CHAPTER I THE ENTRANCE A Few words in the beginning about the Hall as in our American love of fine names we are wont to call what in nine cases out of ten even in houses of pretension is nothing but an entry or passage way. A hall or aula must be a large room large at least in proportion to the size of the house and such a hall it is rare to see in our modern city houses. Our old fashioned houses had often halls. I remember some in houses about the Common in Boston and some in old towns like Gloucester and Hingham that were handsome and that seen to day give a pleasant idea of the comfort and substantial elegance enjoyed by many not over rich people in old times when the population was not so thick as it is to day. In city houses particularly in New York where I believe we are more scrimped for room and where even the richest people are obliged to squeeze themselves into a less number of square feet than in any other city in the world calling itself great there is often a sufficient excuse for these Dining Rooms 16X20, dismal narrow ill lighted entry ways but there is no excuse for them in our country houses. As in meeting a man or a woman so in entering a house the first impression generally goes a great way in shaping our judgment. If on passing the door we find ourselves in a passage six feet wide with a hat stand on one side reducing it to four feet and the bottom step of the staircase coming to within six feet of the door way in front of us and a gaselier dropping to within a foot of our head we get an impression of something that is not precisely generosity and which is not removed either by finding the drawing room overfurnished or by the fact that the hat rack was made by Herter that the carpet
