Mr Ricardo sat on an iron chair at an iron table outside a bar and drank with his coffee a sweet and heady liqueur Yet he was exhilarated Nobody would believe it he said with a little giggle But it was Brittany and summer time Browsing with Browning in Brittany he alliterated wittily and so far I have been fortunate enough not to meet James Lee s wife Mr Ricardo was quite alone He had sent his luggage home from Aix and with his suit case his fine big Rolls Royce and his chauffeur was making a roundabout tour through Brittany to Cherbourg whence by a transatlantic liner what was to him a preferable entry to England could be achieved But the car had lurched and something had broken For three days he must stay in this little town with the uncommon name But his liner wasn't due at Cherbourg for four days and it was Brittany and summer time Moreover this drowsy little square of Lezardrieux with the raised terrace at which he sat the three sides of shops and houses and the empty fourth where a steep cliff of sand and bushes dropped to the pool of the Lezardrieux river made a sharp appeal to him It was operatic Below the brow of the hill he could almost hear the conductor tap with his baton for attention That boy in the bright red shirt strolling across the square might at any moment burst into song But it would only have made an anti climax if he had For the stout middle aged woman who had waddled out from the bar with a big letter in her hand was now at Mr Ricardo's elbow You gave my estaminet as your address at Lezardrieux sir East Dulwich Through Time John D.

Newington Rab MacWilliam,2021-03-31 Stoke Newington has long been one of London's most intriguing and radical areas Famous residents included Daniel Defoe Mary Wollstonecraft and Edgar Allan Poe and it was home to a variety of religious dissenting groups such as Puritans Congregationalists Baptists Presbyterians and Quakers In more recent years it was associated with the Kray Twins the Angry Brigade and the Provisional IRA as well as with a range of creative individuals including Harold Pinter Paul Foot and Marc Bolan Today the neighbourhood is inhabited by a richly eclectic blend of nationalities and cultures It is a home for inner city dwellers of all types from writers and artists to musicians journalists and actors Its appeal has led to its contemporary gentrification making it a rather different place to the somewhat down at heel neighbourhood of the 1960s and 1970s This book reveals through anecdote historical fact and cultural insight how this often perverse argumentative yet tolerant village has become today's fashionable and desirable Stoke Newington The History and Antiquities of the Parish of Tottenham, in the County of Middlesex William Robinson,1840 Copy of the Register of the Electors of the borough of Finsbury, for the year 1833-4 ,1834 Ye Parish of Camerwell William Harnett Blanch,1877
