Housing Finance in Developing Countries R. Buckley, 1996-11-15 The book analyzes housing finance policy in developing countries at a time of unprecedented change in such systems It brings together and updates journal articles originally written as background papers and sector studies for the World Bank's involvement in these changes It focuses on the implications for housing finance of two historic developments the most turbulent period in world financial history and the subsequent widespread liberalization of financial systems and the recognition of the failure of centrally planned economies

Housing Finance in Developing Countries Robert M. Buckley, Housing and Finance in Developing Countries Kavita Datta, Gareth Jones, 2012-10-12 This book explores the linkages between formal and informal housing finance drawing upon the lessons of NGO and micro finance practices Both public and private formal finance institutions have experienced great difficulty in lending below a middle income client group and are often reluctant to lend for the purpose of housing at all This failure of formal finance to filter down to low income households and in particular to women has led various NGOs and community groups to create and adopt innovative finance programmes such as informal savings banks and credit rotating schemes The authors critically assess the impact of these schemes and evaluate links between gender housing and finance
