Journal Of Decorative Propaganda Arts:

The Journal of Decorative and Propaganda Arts Sibel Bozdoğan, Jonathan Mogul, 2017-06-15 This latest volume of the Journal of Decorative and Propaganda Arts explores the role of design and decorative arts in the making of modern Turkey from the late Ottoman Empire to the middle of the twentieth century As in many countries outside of western Europe and North America Turkey's encounter with modernity has largely been the result of an official modernization project from above In the absence of the material and social conditions industrialization capitalist production urbanization and the existence of an autonomous bourgeoisie that characterized the Western world elites seeking to modernize Turkey had a strong sense of delayed development and an urgent desire to catch up with the West This sense of urgency accounts for their reliance on the power of representation especially visual and material culture to express modern ideas institutional reform national identity and social progress The resulting experiments touched virtually every creative field from architecture painting and sculpture to interiors fashion textiles industrial design photography and graphic design Creating a modern national identity for Turkey was a vast undertaking with uneven results In scrutinizing these efforts through multiple lenses this vividly illustrated volume presents a particularly compelling example of the belief in the capacity of form to remake content The contributors include Esra Akcan Göküt Akın T. Elvan Altan Edhem Eldem Ahmet Ersoy F. Dilek Himam Ela Kaşıkçı Sinan Niyazioğlu G. İsmail Turan and Christopher S. Wilson

Journal of Decorative and Propaganda Arts Jonathan Mogul, 2015-10-15 These 10 essays offer an interdisciplinary approach to objects of remembrance during the modern era They investigate the roles such items played in individual lives and larger communities as well as the strategies that artists designers and manufacturers used to produce objects that could serve these functions
