

Dear Parents,

Attached to this letter is your child's Session 1 progress report. I will be assessing skills three times this year. Highlighted is what your child knows. These assessment results help me to know what areas to focus on while in the classroom. I am sharing these results with you to help you better know how your child is progressing towards these preschool/kindergarten skills.

Please note: SKILLS ON THIS PROGRESS REPORT ARE NOT EXPECTED TO BE MASTERED. This just gives us a great source of information on what skills might need more practice. Also, as with all assessments, many factors play a role on test results. If there is something on this report that you know your child knows but isn't marked, don't worry! Many factors play into trying to learn what your child knows. This report is meant to be one resource to learn about what your child knows.

Thank you,

Letters To Parents Of Preschool Children

Letter Writing as a Social Practice David Barton, Nigel Hall, 2000 This book explores the social significance of letter writing Letter writing is one of the most pervasive literate activities in human societies crossing formal and informal contexts Letters are a common text type appearing in a wide variety of forms in most domains of life More broadly the importance of letter writing can be seen in that the phenomenon has been widespread historically being one of earliest forms of writing and a wide range of contemporary genres have their roots in letters The writing of a letter is embedded in a particular social situation and like all other types of literacy objects and events the activity gains its meaning and significance from being situated in cultural beliefs values and practices This book brings together anthropologists historians educators and other social scientists providing a range of case studies that explore aspects of the socially situated nature of letter writing

Frontiers in the Acquisition of Literacy Claire M. Fletcher-Flinn, 2015-09-28 Learning to read and to spell are two of the most important cultural skills that must be acquired by children and for that matter anyone learning a second language We are not born with an innate ability to read A reading system of mental representations that enables us to read must be formed in the brain Learning to read in alphabetic orthographies is the acquisition of such a system which links mental representations of visual symbols letters in print words with pre existing phonological sound and semantic comprehension cognitive systems for language Although spelling draws on the same representational knowledge base and is usually correlated with reading the acquisition processes involved are not quite the same Spelling requires the sequential production of letters in words and at beginning levels there may not be a full degree of integration of phonology with its representation by the orthography Reading on the other hand requires only the recognition of a word for pronunciation Hence spelling is more difficult than reading and learning to spell may necessitate more complete representations or more conscious access to them The learning processes that children use to acquire such cognitive systems in the brain and whether these same processes are universal across different languages and orthographies are central theoretical questions Most children learn to read and spell their language at the same time thus the co ordination of these two facets of literacy acquisition needs explication as well as the effect of different teaching approaches on acquisition Lack of progress in either reading and or spelling is also a major issue of concern for parents and teachers necessitating a cross disciplinary approach to the problem encompassing major efforts from researchers in neuroscience cognitive science experimental psychology and education The purpose of this Research Topic is to summarize and review what has been accomplished so far and to further explore these general issues Contributions from different perspectives are welcomed and could include theoretical computational and empirical works that focus on the acquisition of literacy including cross orthographic research Ohio Public Health
