

I disliked writing a comment page of a specified length, for on the other hand I think it was a good thing for me to have something to do in writing for Harper's way, as you suggest, he gave me the right to live on. If I had no responsibilities or obligations of a domestic nature, I would most certainly arrange my life so that I was not obliged to do anything at any specified time for anybody. I admire people who do the guts to do this. What I am trying to do is to approximate this situation without actually achieving it fully.

There is, then, no immediate likelihood that I will drop the Harper department and make a deal with you to do a piece a month. I have not agreed, either written or verbal, with Harper's, but they have permitted me to go ahead until further notice and I said I would. I have not what they think about the whole thing, and suspect that they must be surprised that the stuff hasn't turned out to be in a comment page. I am sure they are entirely delighted with me as a contributor. I am sure I feel a lot more at home in the New Yorker, and get into a state of mind that it is a better magazine. More comical and interesting.

Thanks for all your interest in my work and the reputation which you offer.

* White held unorthodox views about the system of payment to contributors by anthologists. Often reprinting himself, he felt that the fee he received usually got paid more than lesser known writers. White hated profit sharing or royalty sharing; he knew that a book is a profit and he felt that the contributors should be in on the gamble. When Katharine White put together their Subtreasury of American Literature, he insisted that the contributors receive a percentage of the profits. The publishers—who saw a lot of intricate bookkeeping ahead—minutely complied.

Dear Morris:

I have been corresponding with one Raymond F. Brown in the project of using a piece of mine¹ in a book to be called "Our Canal." The and, however, found out from him what I want to know, his letters have a friendly ambiguity which has begun to disturb me. I turn to you for enlightenment.

1. "I'd Send My Son to Cornell," which had appeared in Cornell.

If he donating my article I would be serving my Alma Mater (about 60¢). I would be happy to do so. If, on the other hand, I would simply be helping another anthologist over the rocky road of life, I would just as well get paid. That is all I want to know—what sort of book this is. Can you tell me?

In Howes' last letter he said, "Eyes Berry and Morris Bishop, for instance, would, I think, feel very uncomfortable if, at this stage of the game, I went to them with an offer to pay them for their contributions." He then suggests (for me) a lump sum of $25. The implication that you and Ryan can be uncomfortable in the presence of money, while I can maintain my famous calm, is what finally got me down. Am I Cornell's son or ain't I?

Of course, I brought this all on by answering Howes' first letter with a request for a statement of what sort of book it was and who was going to get the dough. I am notoriously stern with anthologists, and intend to continue being stern, as I have found, on the whole, that they are a sorry lot (I'm not referring to Howes) and seldom work out their program with fairness to their stable of authors. I am not interested in how trading and it makes me howl with rage when Mr. Howes extols your loyalty and Ryan's and in the same breath slips me twenty-five bucks. What the hell goes on here, anyway? . . .

Yes,
Andy
