See Justice Done Christopher Michael Brown, 2024-01-18 In See Justice Done The Problem of Law in the African American Literary Tradition author Christopher Michael Brown argues that African American literature has profound and deliberate legal roots Tracing this throughline from the eighteenth century to the present Brown demonstrates that engaging with legal culture in its many forms including its conventions paradoxes and contradictions is paramount to understanding Black writing Brown begins by examining petitions submitted by free and enslaved Blacks to colonial and early republic legislatures A virtually unexplored archive these petitions aimed to demonstrate the autonomy and competence of their authors Brown also examines early slave autobiographies such as Olaudah Equiano's Interesting Narrative and Mary Prince's History which were both written in the form of legal petitions These works invoke scenes of Black competence and of Black madness repeatedly and simultaneously Early Black writings reflect how a Black Atlantic world organized by slavery refused to acknowledge Black competence By including scenes of Black madness these narratives critique the violence of the law and predict the failure of future legal counterparts such as Plessy v. Ferguson to remedy injustice Later chapters examine the works of more contemporary writers such as Sutton E Griggs George Schuyler Toni Morrison and Edward P Jones and explore varied topics from American exceptionalism to the legal trope of colorblindness In chronicling these interactions with jurisprudential logics See Justice Done reveals the tensions between US law and Black experiences of both its possibilities and its perils An Introductory History of England: From Waterloo to 1880. 1st ed.
