Teratological Testing T.V.N. Persaud, 2012-12-06 The study of birth defects has assumed an importance even greater now than in the past because mortality rates attributed to congenital anomalies have declined far less than those for other causes of death such as infectious and nutritional diseases. It is estimated that as many as 50% of all pregnancies terminate as miscarriages. In the majority of cases this is the result of faulty development. Major congenital malformations are found in at least 2% of all liveborn infants and 22% of all stillbirths and infant deaths are associated with severe congenital anomalies. Teratological studies of an experimental nature are neither ethical nor justifiable in humans. Numerous investigations have been carried out in laboratory animals and other experimental models in order to improve our understanding of abnormal intra uterine development. In less than two decades the field of experimental teratology has advanced phenomenally. As a result of the wide range of information that is now accumulating it has become possible to obtain an insight into the causes, mechanisms and prevention of birth defects. However considerable work will be needed before these problems can be resolved. The contributions in this volume deal primarily with the areas of teratological evaluation and the use of selected animal models for the study of congenital anomalies. It is not only a documentation of the latest experimental work but it also indicates new and important areas for future research.

Susan M. Webb, Roger A. Hoffman, Manuel L. Puig-Domingo, Russel J. Reiter, 2012-12-06 Harderian glands first described by Jacob Harder in two species of deer in 1694 are large intraorbital glands which with but few exceptions are found in all land vertebrates. Certainly their relatively large size, their phylogenetic age and persistent conservation in all groups as they emerged from an aqueous to an air land environment lend strong support to the logical deduction that they probably play an important role in the physiological adaptation to terrestrial life. Yet few biologists know even what or where these glands are. For a variety of reasons the Harderian glands have not received the attention they deserve and as a result the published works available have been scarce and scattered throughout the world literature. The current situation is remarkably similar to that which existed in regard to the pineal gland prior to the mid 1960s i.e. scattered literature, unknown function, few investigators and little interest. Yet following a few key papers interest in the pineal gland expanded and soon an explosive increase in the knowledge and understanding of the pineal gland took place and continues today. Will history repeat itself? Originally a few of us discussed the desirability of an informal Symposium on the Harderian glands. The Syrian Hamster in Toxicology and Carcinogenesis Research F. Homburger, 1979. Programs and Services National Library of Medicine (U.S.), Annual Report for the Fiscal Year National Library of Medicine (U.S.), 1958. Phenotypic Integration Massimo Pigliucci, Katherine Preston, 2004-04-01. A new voice in the nature nurture debate can be heard at the interface between evolution and development. Phenotypic integration or how large numbers of characteristics are related to make up the whole organism and how these relationships evolve and change their function is a major growth area in research attracting the attention of evolutionary biologists, developmental biologists and geneticists as well as more broadly ecologists, physiologists and paleontologists. This edited collection presents much of the best and most recent work the topic.
