Some Letters of Saint Bernard Abbot of Clairvaux Saint Bernard, Dr. Eales, Brother Hermenegild, 2014-02-01 THIS selection of S Bernard's letters has been made in the hope that it may find its way into the hands of many to whom the volumes of the greater collection are unknown or are for one reason or another inaccessible The letters of great and good men give us information about them which can be derived from no other source As the eyes are to the other bodily senses says the editor of S Augustine's correspondence so are the letters of illustrious men in numberless ways more wonderful than all their other works In them as in the mirror of the human eyes appear the personal qualities passions virtues and vices of the individual Just as no one can better show himself to the life than in his letters so nowhere can he be better known than in them This is true of the letters of every saint as well as of every man of affairs and the peculiar value and charm of such collections of letters is almost universally acknowledged. St Bernard's unique position in the Church in his day and the widespread authority he possessed no less than his acknowledged place among the spiritual writers of all ages tend to make his correspondence peculiarly interesting as revealing in a more intimate way than any of his more formal writings the characteristic qualifications and virtues which won for him the great position he held so long during the middle ages. His learning and judgment no doubt fully appear in his tracts, treatises and sermons but in the private letters that were intended only for the eye of the recipient the reader can get a deeper insight into the man and the saint and learn more fully because more naturally his real qualities. In them appear his prudence and zeal, his love of truth and piety, the warmth of his human affections and his natural eloquence with more genuine truth than say in his commentary on The Canticle of Canticles, his Mystical Vine or his Treatise against Abelard.
