expedition Chapter two describes another dramatic event involving an Indian woman the Nez Perce Wetxuiis who was never mentioned in the journals of the expedition but who may have saved the lives of the starving and exhausted white men The Nez Perce proved to be stalwart friends who shared food knowledge of the country and dugout canoe construction so the Corps could continue on toward the ocean Chapter three focuses on reaching the Columbia River the Big River a critical milestone that they hoped would take them swiftly and easily to the Pacific They met more friendly tribes there and joined them in feasts of salmon Chapter four describes the explorers encounter with the Chinookan Traders at Celilo Falls the Great Falls of the Columbia where they entered yet another world in the culture of Northwest Indians Here they were faced with the sophisticated center of trade for the Pacific Plateau Trade System Tribes from downriver came to trade and meet with those from the eastern plateau region of the northwest The Corps entered the spectacular Columbia River Gorge navigated dangerous rapids in dugout canoes and survived to continue onward downstream Chapter five covers a grueling 150 miles downstream from the beginning of tidal influence to the Pacific Ocean Battered by storms and tides this relatively short distance was anything but a downstream float trip However they did plant the flag for the United States on the northern shore of the Columbia River near the ocean and thus staked a claim to the northwest This done they immediately made plans to pass the winter in a sheltered spot on the south shore and made their way across the river to build a stockade they called Fort Clatsop The winter passed there is covered in chapter six They brought journals and maps up to date hunted made moccasins and traded with their Indian neighbors Chapter seven is an account of their homeward journey east now up the Columbia They portaged around rapids and finally took an overland route to the lands of the Nez Perces Chapter eight describes their reunion with their Indian friends and their stay with them while waiting for the snow to melt enough to open Lolo Pass for their last crossing of the Divide The book ends with an epilogue and brief profiles of Captains Lewis and Clark the Shoshone woman Sacagawea and York Clark s slave Each chapter contains a trail guide which points out actual sites of camps and significant events and landmarks experienced during the expedition There are also regional places of interest and sightseeing opportunities listed along with maps One of the directives given to the Captains was to collect information on flora and fauna that might be new to science They did so with great scientific care and skill At the end of this book you will find a description of the plants and animals the explorers catalogued as they traveled across the northwest There is also a bibliography and an index

Lewis and Clark Reframed David L. Nicandri, 2021-07-23 Spanish British and French explorers reached the Pacific Northwest before Meriwether Lewis and William Clark The American captains benefited from those predecessors even carrying with them copies of their published accounts James Cook George Vancouver and Alexander Mackenzie and to a lesser extent fur traders John Meares and Robert Gray directly and indirectly influenced the expedition Based on new material as well as revised essays from popular history journals Lewis and Clark Reframed examines several curious and seemingly inexplicable aspects of the journey after the Corps of Discovery crossed the Rocky Mountains The captains' journals demonstrate that they relied on Mackenzie's 1801 Voyages from Montreal as a trail guide They borrowed field techniques and favorite literary expressions at times plagiarizing entire paragraphs Cook's literature also informed the pair and his naming conventions evoke fresh ideas about an enduring expedition mystery the identity of the two or three journalists whose records are now missing Additional journal text analysis dispels the notion that the captains were equals despite expedition lore Lewis claimed all the epochal discoveries for himself and in one of his more memorable passages drew on Mackenzie for inspiration Parallels between Cook's and other exploratory accounts offer evidence that like many long distance voyagers Lewis grappled with homesickness His friendship with Mahlon Dickerson lends insights into Lewis's shortcomings and eventual undoing As secretary of the navy Dickerson drew from Lewis's troubled past to impede the 1840s ocean expedition set to emulate Cook and solidify America's claim through Lewis and Clark to the region

Across America Maurice Isserman, 2009 In 2003 Americans began celebrating the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition 1803-1806 a journey of discovery that proved a seminal moment in the history of the exploration of the North American continent

Two Centuries of Lewis and Clark William L. Lang, Carl Abbott, Roberta Conner, Christopher Zinn, 2004 The landscape encountered by the Corps of Discovery during their multi-year cross-country trek to the Pacific was dramatically different from the one that greeted visitors attending Portland's Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition in 1905 or the one that exists in the Pacific Northwest today On the occasion of the bicentennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition and the centennial of the Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition the time is ripe for reconciling those earlier events with present day activities In Two Centuries of Lewis and Clark William L Lang and Carl Abbott have collaborated to address those issues Lang scrutinizes the motivations for the Lewis and Clark expedition and the environmental ramifications of its discoveries on the people and the landscape of the Columbia River Basin Abbott examines the ways in which the Lewis and Clark Expedition advanced President Jefferson's goal of developing the economic potential of the Pacific Northwest particularly through the exploitation of the region's abundant natural resources William L Lang is professor of history at Portland State University he is the author of a number of books including A Confederacy of Ambition William Winlock Miller and The Making of Washington Territory Carl Abbott is professor of urban studies and planning at Portland State University and author of several books among them The Metropolitan Frontier Cities in the Modern American West
