Government Contracting And Technological Change:

government contracting and technological change clarence h. danhof,1968 Government Contracting and Technological Change Clarence H. Danhof,Brookings Institution,1968 Technological Change Robert Fox,1996

Technological Change gathers together examples of the best current thinking on methodology and the theoretical perspectives that are increasingly of concern to historians of technology whilst at the same time presenting other papers which reflect the state of the art in key areas of historical debate The volume emphasises the need both to establish a common forum for theoretical and empirical research and also to delineate the shared concerns of these two treatments which are too often reflected as conflicting rather than mutually supportive approaches to the writing of the history of technology Technology and the American Economy: Educational implications of technological change United States. National Commission on Technology, Automation, and Economic Progress,1966 Automation and Technological Change United States. Congress. Economic Joint Committee,1955 Sharing Power Donald F. Kettl,2011-07-01 In the flush of enthusiasm to make government work better reformers from both left and right have urged government to turn as many functions as possible over to the private sector and to allow market competition instill efficiency and choice In fact government has been doing just this for years every major policy initiative launched since World War II has been managed by public private partnerships Yet such privatization has not solved government s problems While there have been some positive results there has been far less success than advocates of market competition have promised In a searching examination of why the competition prescription has not worked well Donald F Kettl finds that government has largely been a poor judge of private markets Because government rarely operates in truly competitive markets contracting out has not so much solved the problems of inefficiency but has aggravated them Government has often not proved to be an intelligent consumer of the goods and services it has purchased Kettl provides specific recommendations as to how government can become a smart buyer knowing what it wants and judging better what it has bought Through detailed case studies Kettl shows that as market imperfections increase so do problems in governance and management He examines the A 76 program for buying goods and services the FTS 2000 telecommunications system the Superfund program the Department of Energy s production of nuclear weapons and contracting out by state and local governments He argues that government must be more aggressive in managing contracts if it is to build successful partnerships with outside contractors Kettl maintains that the answer is not more government but a smarter one which requires strong political leadership to refocus the bureaucracy s mission and to change the bureaucratic culture Government Contractors Warren R. Anderson,1994 Reviews the use of contract consultants by federal agencies Discusses a broad range of contract services obtained by the government such as professional administrative and management support services Charts and tables NBS Special Publication ,1968
