Children's Belief about the Social Consequences of Emotional Expression Jose A. Feito,1997-08 This study investigated young children s expectations regarding others potential reactions to their emotional displays These expectations were considered precursors to the display rules for emotional expression evident in middle childhood Possible gender differences in the children s expectancies for the expression of anger sadness and fear were examined Preschool and early grade school children ages 4 3 6 4 7 0 8 7 respectively were presented with eight hypothetical narratives illustrated with felt puppets The identity of an audience figure accompanying the protagonist of each narrative varied between subjects in three experimental conditions mother father and same sex peer The narratives also varied the social context within which the protagonist expressed an emotion The scenarios were qualitatively coded to assess if children expected favorable or unfavorable reactions from the audience figure to the protagonist s emotional display The expression of anger elicited substantial unfavorable expectancies from children in both age groups but the expression of sadness and fear did not. It was theorized that the display rules for these emotions have different developmental timelines. Anger receives early socialization pressure while sadness and fear are not sanctioned until after approximately age 8. Children expected peers and parents to respond equally unfavorably to expressions of anger, suggesting that both groups are important agents in emotional socialization at this age. Unlike the preschoolers, the early grade school children used social information about a provocateur's status and intentions to mediate their expectations regarding audience reactions to anger. The only significant gender difference to emerge was that the older girls expected mothers to be more disapproving of anger than fathers or peers. It was suggested that gender role requirements for emotional expression may not be enforced until children reach grade school ages and that the same sex parent may come to be the primary socialization agent for these roles. Asian American children held fewer unfavorable expectancies for the expression of anger than children of other ethnicities. African American girls held more unfavorable expectancies for the expression of anger than African American boys. Future research should elaborate upon the specific content and developmental timelines associated with different cultures' emotional display rules.

The Inevitability of Tragedy: Henry Kissinger and His World Barry Gewen, 2020-04-28. A new portrait of Henry Kissinger focusing on the fundamental ideas underlying his policies: Realism, balance of power, and national interest. Few public officials have provoked such intense controversy as Henry Kissinger. During his time in the Nixon and Ford administrations, he came to be admired and hated in equal measure. Notoriously, he believed that foreign affairs ought to be based primarily on the power relationships of a situation, not simply on ethics. He went so far as to argue that under certain circumstances, America had to protect its national interests even if that meant repressing other countries' attempts at democracy. For this reason, many today, on both the right and left, dismiss him as a latter-day Machiavelli, ignoring the breadth and complexity of his thought. With The Inevitability of Tragedy, Barry Gewen corrects this shallow view, presenting the fascinating story of Kissinger's development as both a strategist and an intellectual, and examining his unique role in government through his ideas. It analyzes his contentious policies in Vietnam and Chile, guided by a fresh understanding of his definition of Realism: the belief that world politics is based on an inevitable, tragic competition for power. Crucially, Gewen places Kissinger's pessimistic thought in a European context. He considers how Kissinger was deeply impacted by his experience as a refugee from Nazi Germany and explores the links between his notions of power and those of his mentor, Hans Morgenthau, the father of Realism, as well as those of two other German Jewish migrants who shared his concerns about the weaknesses of democracy: Leo Strauss and Hannah Arendt. The Inevitability of Tragedy offers a thoughtful perspective on the origins of Kissinger's sober worldview and argues that a reconsideration of his career is essential at a time when American foreign policy lacks direction.
