In Search Of Natural Architecture:

In Search of Natural Architecture David Pearson, 2005 David Pearson has travelled the world in his quest to discover the buildings that fulfil the three themes of natural architecture ecology health and spiritual awareness Remarkable photography and evocative text focus on the rediscovery of ancient wisdom that has generated this new awakening in architecture

Earth to Spirit David Pearson, 1994 Many people feel that architects have lost their way Since World War II the urban and industrial landscapes have been increasingly dominated by brutalistic corporate architecture Everyone is familiar with this in shopping malls city centres business parks and mass housing projects the infamous filing cabinets for people This has led many to the view that architects are losing the ability to design buildings that are sympathetic either to people or to the natural environment design has encouraged him to look for an alternative way a quest for natural architecture The journey was long and wide ranging and led him first to his book The Natural House Book camera always to hand he travels the world finding glimmers of hope which reflect the three profound themes he defines in natural architecture ecology health and spiritual awareness the buildings he found are integrated with lives and landscapes He also travels in time back to some of the earliest structures fashioned by humanity through traditional dwellings yurts and tipis which have had a continuity of use over thousands of years to some of the most recent buildings that display a new awakening for modern natural architecture how all people can live in buildings harmonized with the land some day in the future
