Local Store Marketing For Retailers John J Matthews,2008-10 Most store owners get into retail because they have a love for both people and the products they sell They build their stores hire friendly staff unlock the doors and wait for the world to come in The question in their minds isn t if customers will come but when All too often retail business owners fall victim to the new guy syndrome they build a new store open their doors and rest on their laurels only to see their sales erode rapidly It s easy to get excited about your new business when your store first becomes visible to customers during your grand opening but it s another thing to generate this customer excitement some two years later Successful retailers don t fall for the new guy syndrome and develop marketing strategies to maintain their sales momentum well beyond their break in period These marketing strategies may include brand advertisements in newspapers direct mail radio and television all the usual advertising options available to retailers But where the real war is won is in the trenches at the local store marketing LSM level The most successful retailers win the battle for customer traffic because they make an operational commitment to local store marketing They know local store marketing captures the entire customer base in the critical three mile radius surrounding their store In addition they know that implementing local store marketing is low cost or no cost Notice I didn t say no work though Successful retailers effectively infuse their year long promotional campaigns with local store marketing building a strong sales foundation for sustained and long term growth and you can too That is where this manual comes in Local store marketing is a must for you to fully capitalize on the sales potential of your store Successfully capturing these customers will translate into both short and long term sales growth in addition to effectively locking out your competition The sales success of your store depends on you proactively going after sales using local store marketing instead of passively waiting for customers to find you The decision is yours you can either choose the passive route letting your success or failure be predicated on customers opting for your store OR you can aggressively maximize the sales opportunities within your three mile business area Prudent store operators take control of their marketplaces to maximize every sales opportunity This manual is designed to help you do just that by tapping into the power
