

How Was Education Reformed?

- In the early 1800s, many reformers began pushing for a system of public education.
- Horace Mann, a lawyer who became head of the Massachusetts Board of Education, was a leader in educational reform.
- Massachusetts founded the first normal school, a school for training high-school graduates to become teachers.
- New colleges were created during the age of reform, but most admitted only men. African Americans and women began to have some access to higher education.
