For those countries, "Country-Specific Foreign Investment Policies with Substantive Effects" shows that the 1990s witnessed an additional 100 foreign-invested firms, representing 10% of investment, with the rest of the countries that implemented these changes in policies. Interestingly, the additional investment and those 100 new firms came from 10 to 15 different foreign countries, indicating that the 1990s became a more open market for foreign investment.
