Your Daughter's Role in Today's World, what Every Parent Should Know about Opportunities for Women in Armed Forces United States. Department of Defense, 1956 From Jobs to Careers Stacey Frederick, Gladys Lopez-Acevedo, Raymond Robertson, Mexico Vergara Bahena, 2021-12-17 An oft cited strategy to advance economic development is to further integrate developing countries into global trade particularly through global value chains bolstered by the expansion of female intensive industries to bring more women into the formal labor force As a result a frequent debate centers on whether the apparel industry the most female intensive and globally engaged manufacturing industry can be a key player in this strategy In recent decades the apparel industry has shifted production to low wage developing countries increasing the demand for women closing male female wage gaps and bringing women into the formal labor force from agriculture and informal work But is an apparel led export strategy sufficient to induce a broader transition from jobs women do to survive to careers promising stable employment and a sense of identity From Jobs to Careers answers this question by focusing on seven countries where apparel plays a vital role in their export baskets Bangladesh Cambodia the Arab Republic of Egypt Pakistan Sri Lanka Turkey and Vietnam It finds that the apparel industry indeed can serve as a launching pad to bring more women into the labor market For this approach to work however complementary policies must tackle the barriers that hinder women's pursuit of long term workforce participation and better paid occupations Key policy recommendations include increasing the participation of female production workers in export oriented apparel manufacturing and associated industries upgrading within manufacturing related industries boosting access to education and breaking glass ceilings The
