

A person wearing a black shirt and white gloves is using a grey impact driver to tighten a lug nut on a car wheel. The car is white and is on a lift. The background is a workshop setting.

HEAVY-DUTY

While technically an impact driver appears to be the right tool for the job, the problem stems from when the lug nuts are tightened beyond 100lb-ft. While the lug nuts of most car tires should be tightened or torqued from 80 to 100lb-ft, many are tightened to an even greater degree. Heavy automotive vehicles with large tires need to be torqued even higher.

This means that a typical impact driver will have to face about 1500in-lbs (125lb-ft) in terms of torque which reaches the maximum limits of their capabilities.
