

August 30th; the east wind teased the whites to show off our new coat of black and our white sails. Triumf was the poorest of the day was too splendid for motors, so we hours later, approached the land to the west of

along the littoral. Villas in plots, like armchairs and beetroot; like tombs, like factories for making false hair, imitation mass-produced tobacco, and unspoilably dispersed, bomb-proof system for destroying more sensible towns appeared to have taken up sprouting so profusely near the sea; those on the points of hills, and the bigger were no longer towns, but places conquered another part of the dispersed, bomb-proof. The visitors to the villas floated, decayed-beris, where the sea met the land. Nights in harbour. But the weather was in Carlo.

approximately square in plan; it is spacious and bright blue; solid quays, clean and prosperous. The town appears to climb in a roocooco suit. Yachts were lying on our starboard land as an impressive collection than any we had seen anywhere among them. Fortunately we had studied which had informed us that the water in the bay. We dropped anchor closer to the quay than at astern with supreme anxiety. Mr. Bush had made our stern gangway to the quay then had fitted a sling to the outer end, the top of sixteen halyards purchase, and Eubel was able to swing hinge into the socket in the transom.

Our immediate neighbours that evening were the small cutter, Winibelle, in which the Frenchman, Marin Marie, had sailed across the Atlantic single-handed, and a schooner of about twice Triumf's size which had formerly been owned by an Englishman and which still, though under new ownership, flew the Red Ensign (perhaps because the luxury tax on French citizens owning yachts is extremely heavy). Winibelle had changed hands after her Atlantic crossing and was occupied by a French trio whose acquaintance we had made in Antibes. The owners were a handsome young married couple and the third party on board was a curly-haired youth who seldom was dressed in anything more than was strictly necessary to cover his reproductive organs, and who was apparently the paid crew, since he was always referred to by the owners as "the mousse". He did most of the work on board, even cooking, when the owners had not gone away in their car to some more fashionable spot. Winibelle is of Norwegian double-ended shape, and as they had no stern gangway but chose to lie stern-on like the rest of us, they had nailed a piece of motor-car tyre to the upper parts of their rudder, and they hauled in on their stern lines until the rudder, protected superficially by the tyre, rubbed against the quay. Poor Winibelle's deck was so badly in need of caulking that when rain came, as we were to see later, the occupants only kept moderately dry by taking all the sails and spreading them over the yacht.

Further along the line was the handsome Bermudian ketch, San Domenico, built in Italy to an English design with a British officer of the Naval Reserve on board, his Italian wife and her fair-haired son, who, at the age of five, could haul himself hand over hand up the bare steel wire of the forestay. They had two delightful Neapolitan yacht hands.

Then came the big schooner Aloha, French-built and with many harbour comforts. We could watch dinner parties held on deck there, beneath the sky-blue awnings and with lights gleaming on silver and glass and white linen, and the faces and shoulders of the sunburned women looking almost negroid against their pale clothes.

Next to that luxurious boat was a more interesting one, a small Breton yawl from la Rochelle. She had sailed round the coast with two youths on board, and they were having the hell of a time. The Bretons had just returned from a trip with two women to the island of Corsica. One of the youths described the trip to me in a few words. "First day, the wind came. Second day the wind increased and the tarts, who'd been sick from the outset, began to scream. Third day we sighted Corsica, but the engine wouldn't go so we sailed around the island. Fourth day we decided to return to Monte Carlo. Seventh day we dropped anchor here. It was all profound exploration of the human condition encapsulated in his vivid depictions of the sea and its metaphorical significance. This comprehensive collection integrates Melville's seafaring narratives with his deep philosophical inquiries characterized by rich symbolism and complex characterizations. Through masterful prose he combines elements of adventure, existential contemplation, and social criticism, establishing a unique voice that continues to resonate in American literature, particularly within the Transcendentalist movement and its responses to Romanticism. Herman Melville, born in 1819, was heavily influenced by his early maritime experiences as a sailor in the Pacific, which informed his understanding of the sea as both a physical and metaphysical realm. His works reflect the tension between nature and civilization, grappling with themes of isolation, fate, and the conflict of individual morality versus societal expectations. Melville's extensive travels and encounters with diverse cultures fostered a unique worldview, positioning him as a pioneer of American realism and inquiry into the human psyche. This anthology is essential for scholars and general readers alike, offering a comprehensive insight into one of America's most enigmatic literary figures. It stands as not only a historical artifact but also a profound philosophical treatise, making it a must-read for those seeking to understand the intricacies of human experience as articulated through the lens of the restless seas.
