YUVICA BHARGAVA

introduction

Creative thinking refers to originality and uniqueness of ideas or solutions that did not previously exist.

Creative thinking is generally characterized by what Bruner calls "effective surprise". If the product or idea is unusual, the response of most who experience it is one of instant surprise or of being startled.

Creative thinking is distinguished from other types of thinking by the fact that it involves the production of novel and original ideas or solutions to problems.

EXAMPLE Every year new models of household appliances, tape-recorders, cars, scooters, and television sets produced may not be original unless unique features are added to these products.

Another important criterion that characterizes creative thinking is its appropriateness in a particular context.

Simply thinking of being different without any purpose, doing things in one's own ways, being non-conformist, indulging in fantasy without any purpose or coming out with a bizarre idea, is at times mistaken for creative thinking.

Researchers tend to agree that thinking is said to be creative when it is reality-oriented, appropriate, constructive, and socially desirable.

TYPES OF THINKING

CONVERGENT

- Convergent thinking refers to thinking that is required to solve problems which have only one correct answer.
- The mind converges to the correct solution.
- EXAMPLE - Based on a number series, where you have to find the next number. Only one
