George P. Murdock and
Douglas R. White
University of Pittsburgh

ABSTRACT:

The Standard Cross-Cultural Sample contains the best-described society in each of 186 cultural provinces of the world, chosen so that cultural independence of each unit in terms of historical origin and cultural diffusion could be considered maximal with respect to the others societies in the sample. Often the time period chosen is that of the earliest high quality ethnographic description. Hence the SCCS is primarily a sample of preindustrial societies.

The original paper, published in the journal Ethnology in 1969, presented the first research results of the Cross-Cultural Cumulative Coding Center (CCCCC), a unit established in 1968 by Murdock and White at the University of Pittsburgh, with support from the National Science Foundation. The center was organized to offer to scholars a representative sample of the world's known and well described cultures, each "pinpointed" to the smallest identifiable subgroup of the society in question at a specific point in time, and to provide the first set of coded data for the sample. The sample selected by Murdock and White has the advantages of providing a sample size sufficiently large to test multivariate hypotheses but sufficiently small to allow complete coding by different authors; one with pinpointing of dates and focal groups and with a rich ethnographic bibliography and multiple data quality ratings that facilitate cumulative coding of comparative data on a wide variety of topics.

Although the SCCS maximizes the relative independence of sample cases, the 1969 article also provides standard Galton's problem controls for historical nonindependence of cases, and demonstrates with illustrations of their use that Galton's problem controls are needed to make valid statistical inferences even with a relatively large cross-cultural sample. This cautionary scientific result has not been properly emphasized by the Human Relations Area Files, with which the SCCS has no

Warriors and Peacemakers Mark Cooney, 1998-04 Why do some conflicts escalate into violence while others dissipate harmlessly Under what circumstances will people kill and why While homicide has been viewed largely in the pathological terms of crime and deviance violence Mark Cooney contends is a naturally occurring form of conflict found throughout history and across cultures under certain social conditions Cooney has analyzed the social control of homicide within and across over 30 societies and interviewed several dozens of prisoners incarcerated for murder or manslaughter as well as members of their families Violence such as homicide can only be understood he argues by transcending the traditional focus on the social characteristics of the killer and victims and by looking at the role played by family members friends neighbors onlookers police officers and judges These third parties can be a source of peace or violence depending on how they are configured in particular cases Violence flourishes Cooney demonstrates when authority is either very strong or very weak and when third party ties are strong and boundaries between groups sharply defined Drawing on recent theory in the lively new sociological speciality of conflict management Mark Cooney has culled a vast array of evidence from modern and preindustrial societies to provide us with the first general sociological analysis of human violence
