Kingstone, 2010-11-01 The success of political efforts to create a more open economy in Brazil over the past decade has depended crucially on support from the industrial sector which long enjoyed the benefits of protection by the state from economic competition Why businesses previously so sheltered would back neoliberal reform and why opposition arose at times from sectors least threatened by free trade are the puzzles this book seeks to answer Drawing on more than one hundred interviews with industrialists and business association representatives as well as a wide range of other sources Peter Kingstone argues that the key to understanding the behavior of industrialists lies in the impact of four factors on their preferences for reform the effect of economic crisis on industrialists perception of the viability of the earlier development model the sectoral location of their firms in the economy and the advantages historically accruing therefrom the adjustment options available to them given their position in the market and the credibility of the government s promises about reform and its tactical choices for getting them implemented through the political system The mix of these four factors Kingstone shows left business preferences relatively malleable and thus available for support of reform even in the face of potentially high costs Whether such support was forthcoming depended on industrialists perceptions of the ability of government leaders to deliver on their promises Widespread resistance to reform occurred when leaders lost their credibility Under Fernando Collor s leadership that credibility was never recovered under Fernando Henrique Cardoso s it was recovered through increasing concessions to industrialists on the character of the reform program

Coalition Agreements as Control Devices Heike Klüver, Hanna Bäck, Svenja Krauss, 2023-03-21 Many coalition cabinets negotiate lengthy coalition contracts outlining the agenda for the time in office. Not only does negotiating these agreements take up time and resources but compromises have to be made which may result in cabinet conflicts and electoral costs. This book explores why political parties negotiate such agreements and argues that coalition agreements are important control devices that allow coalition parties to keep their partners in line. The authors show that their use varies with the preference configuration in cabinet and the allocation of ministerial portfolios. First they posit that parties will only negotiate policy issues in a coalition agreement when they disagree on these issues and when they are important to all partners. Second since controlling a ministry provides parties with important information and policy making advantages parties use agreements to constrain their partners particularly when they control the ministry in charge of a policy area. Finally they argue that coalition agreements only work as effective control devices if coalition parties settle controversial issues in these contracts. The COALITIONAGREE Dataset is used to evaluate the expectations set out in the book the dataset maps the content of 229 coalition agreements that were negotiated by 189 parties between 1945 and 2015 in 24 Western and Eastern European countries. The results show that coalition parties systematically use agreements to control their partners when policy issues are divisive and salient and when they are confronted with a hostile minister. These agreements only effectively contain conflicts however when parties negotiate a compromise on precisely the issues that divide them. Comparative Politics is a
