Getting To Grips With Green Plans:

Getting to Grips with Green Plans Barry Dalal Clayton, 2013-12-19 One of the more significant recommendations to emerge from UNCED in 1992 was the call in Agenda 21 for countries to develop and implement national sustainable development strategies. Most countries have responded to this challenge. However, many countries also have a long history of drawing up planning exercises at this level to deal with environmental problems. Green planning is now used as a shorthand term for a range of such national level planning initiatives covering both sustainable development and environmental concerns and countries from the North and the South can benefit from a pooling of knowledge. Getting to Grips with Green Plans presents a cogent analysis of industrial countries' experiences in this area, drawing out lessons and observations from broad empirical experience. Part 1 provides an overview of national green planning, reviewing its origins and scope, identifying popular approaches and common processes, highlighting important issues such as participation, the influence of domestic politics, and the track record of more ambitious regional plans, and comparing approaches in developed and developing countries. Part 2 goes on to present a series of detailed case studies drawn largely from interviews with key individuals responsible for coordinating national green planning processes. These cases come from a range of Western and Eastern European countries, the US and Canada, and Australia and New Zealand. Some of these case studies show impressive records of achievement, whilst others demonstrate potential stumbling blocks. All demonstrate the difficulty of putting the concept of sustainable development into practice. Barry Dalal Clayton is director of the Environmental Planning Group at the International Institute for Environment and Development, London. In recent years, Dr Dalal Clayton has been deeply involved in analyzing approaches to national sustainable development strategies and environmental action plans in many countries and in advising governments and international agencies in this field. His other current research interests include environmental impact assessment, community-based wildlife management, and land use planning. Originally published in 1996.

Policy G. Bruce Doern, 2010 Essays in honour of one of Canada's finest scholars of public policy Get A Grip Gino Wickman, Mike Paton, 2014-04-08 It's time to take your business to the next level. Eileen Sharp and Vic Hightower were frustrated. After years of profitable, predictable growth, Swan Services was in a rut. People were pointing fingers and assigning blame, but nothing happened to solve Swan's mounting problems. It felt as though they were working harder than ever but with less impact. The company Eileen and Vic had founded and built for 10 years was a different place. It just wasn't fun anymore. Their story is not unusual. The challenges they were facing are common, predictable, and solvable. Get A Grip tells the story of how Swan Services resolves its issues by implementing the Entrepreneurial Operating System. With the help of EOS, Eileen, Vic, and their leadership team master a set of managerial tools that allow them to get traction on their business, grow the business, and deliver better results for clients. The story of Swan Services is a fable, but the Entrepreneurial Operating System is very real.

Advancing Sustainability at the Sub-National Level

Eran Feitelson, 2017-07-05 Sustainability notions have been widely embraced by planners However the question of what can planners contribute to the advancement of such notions has not received much attention until now This volume examines the potential contribution of planning to the advancement of sustainability at sub national level and the limitations it faces in doing so Bringing together case studies from the US UK Poland Israel South Africa The Netherlands and Italy it covers a wide range of issues and contexts ranging from the metropolitan to the community level On the basis of these case studies the book shows that planners do indeed have a variety of options to advance sustainability notions at these levels and appear to be doing so The book proposes that planners should operate at two levels firstly to change institutional structures and secondly to advance sustainability notions incrementally in the meantime within the existing institutional constraints

Waste Trading among Rich Nations Kate O'Neill, 2000-06-19 When most people think of hazardous waste trading they think of egregious dumping by U S and European firms on poor countries in Africa Latin America and the Caribbean But over 80 percent of the waste trade takes place between industrialized nations and is legal by domestic and international standards In Waste Trading among Rich Nations Kate O'Neill asks why some industrialized nations voluntarily import such wastes in the absence of pressing economic need She focuses on Britain as an importer and Germany as an exporter and also looks at France Australia and Japan According to O'Neill most important in determining whether an industrialized democracy imports waste are two aspects of its regulatory system The first is the structure of the regulatory process how powers and responsibilities are allocated among different agencies and levels of government and the structure of the hazardous waste disposal industry The second is what O'Neill calls the style of environmental regulation in particular access to the policy process and mode of implementation Hazardous waste management is in crisis in most industrialized countries and is becoming increasingly controversial in international negotiations O'Neill not only examines waste trading empirically but also develops a theoretical model of comparative regulation that can be used to establish links between domestic and international environmental politics

Knowledge of the Land D. Barry Dalal-Clayton, David Dent, 2001 Planners and decision makers today need to be in command of a broader range of tools and information than ever before Knowledge of the Land aims to show what is available in the way of natural resources information and how it has been used or not used in planning and policy making For both methods and applications the authors have tried to provide enough detail for the reader to judge what data skills and procedures are required to meet their particular needs and the ample references give guidance on where to find further information There has been a notable shift in planning and rural development over the past decade Technocratic top down approaches are still very much in evidence but there has been an explosion of participatory initiatives Many institutions cling to sectoral thinking There is however growing recognition that sustainable development involves balancing environmental social and economic considerations Such a balance requires an interdisciplinary approach both to the the survey of natural resources and to the use of the information acquired in land evaluation planning environmental
