

A top-down view of a desk. In the upper left, a pair of tortoiseshell-rimmed glasses lies on a light-colored surface. To its right is a small, round, textured cork. In the lower left, a spiral-bound notebook with a light brown cover is open, showing a white page with faint, illegible handwriting. To the right of the notebook is a dark, textured, dome-shaped object. A semi-transparent black rectangular box is centered over the lower half of the image, containing white text.

Historical Judgement Jonathan Gorman, 2014-11-27. The historical profession is not noted for examining its own methodologies. Indeed, most historians are averse to historical theory. In Historical Judgement, Jonathan Gorman's response to this state of affairs is to argue that if we want to characterize a discipline, we need to look to persons who successfully occupy the role of being practitioners of that discipline. So to model historiography, we must do so from the views of historians. Gorman begins by showing what it is to model a discipline by using recent philosophy of law and philosophy of science. There are different models at work whose rivalry and resolution are to be historically understood. With this approach in place, he is able to develop the history of historiography and explore the character of historiography as presented by historians. He reveals that historians conform to various norms that historians now and in the past have agreed and disagreed about the same set of interrelated matters: truth telling, moral judgement and the synthesis of facts, and it is this internal understanding that we need to recover if we are to arrive at a correct characterization of the discipline of historiography. Demonstrating how the practice of historiography requires choices and therefore the exercise of judgement, Gorman is able to show that in their making of judgements, historians enjoy the immense benefit of hindsight. He shows how, in reflecting on their own discipline, historians have typically failed to attend adequately to the history of historiography, neglecting to situate previous historians within their historical contexts or to pay adequate attention to the fact that present historians too are within a context that will change. In addition, Gorman's approach, which emphasizes the power and necessity of choice and which rests on the pragmatic, holistic empiricism of Quine, shows postmodernism not to be the threat that some historians feel it to be; indeed, it is shown to be a radical form of empiricism. Gorman shows how the historical enterprise may be established in our factual and moral understanding in the light of our choices and commitments to a shared world. Historical Judgement is an original and important contribution to the philosophy of history. By bringing together the ideas of historians and philosophers, Gorman presents a much more practitioner-focused examination of the discipline of history, one that will hopefully encourage historians to think more about the nature of what they do.

Nonconscious Social Information Processing Pawel Lewicki, 2013-10-22. Nonconscious Social Information Processing presents a research program concerned with the processing of social information. It cannot be considered a typical social psychological research program, however, because it is not aimed at explaining any specific social psychological phenomena, nor are the cognitive processes studied specific to the processing of social information. The program explores complex or high-level processing of information that is not mediated by conscious awareness, and social cognition seems to be an appropriate area in which to investigate this kind of processing. The research program began with observations which suggest that nonconscious acquisition and processing of information play a major role in human development and adjustment.

The first two chapters discuss these observations and present preliminary theoretical assumptions. The subsequent chapters contain reports of 34 experiments on nonconscious information processing. The book is addressed not only to personality and social psychologists but also to cognitive psychologists concerned with information processing in general. The former may find this research relevant because most of the experiments describe some mechanisms of acquisition and utilization of social information problems they are working on themselves. The latter may want to ignore the specific stimulus material, i.e., social information employed in most of the experiments and focus on the general nature of the cognitive mechanisms studied.
