How to Remember Everything

Ward off brain fog and protect your memory long-term with this surprisingly simple plan. By Danielle Bruff

IT HAPPENS TO ALL OF US: YOU STOP AT THE STORE AND FORGET THE ONE thing you went for. You blank on your co-worker's husband's name—Is it John? Jim? And where are those darn keys??? It's normal to be forgetful once in a while, especially if you've got a lot on your plate. But here's a shocker: Even years away from worrying about senior moments, research shows you can actually begin as early as your 20s, and it continues as you take a few easy steps throughout your day can help you help you remember where you put those keys!

Take a sticky-note break

Research shows that taking a sticky-note break can help you remember more. In one study, participants who took a sticky-note break to write down a list of items to remember were more likely to remember them than those who didn't. So, the next time you're trying to remember a list of items, try taking a sticky-note break. Write down the items on a sticky note, and then look at the note when you need to remember them. This simple trick can help you remember more.

STEP #3: Change the font on your morning memo

Is Times New Roman just so-so? Try using a different, slightly difficult-to-decipher font—it's been shown to improve your long-term retention, according to research published in Journal of Cognitive Psychology. Focusing on font may make your brain's center work a little harder your recall. Change to a bold, italicized (the font is for a quick fix that's but your brain will
