

Entrance

The entrance to a fox's earth is usually taller than it is wide, with a gap of approximately 20cm (7.9in) at its widest point.

Den

The burrow is a protective den for the fox's offspring. Excess soil is cleared during springtime to make room for kits to eat and play.

Ramp

Fox burrows are not particularly complex. A gradually sloping underground ramp is all they need to reach their dens, which are usually around 2m (6.6ft) deep.

Food store

Cavities branching off from the main ramp are used to store food. Scraps of food are also commonly found around the earth entrance.
