

Library Resources versus Internet Resources

- “Library resources” and “internet resources” -- really a false dichotomy.
- A great proportion of library resources are available on the web.
- The parameters of a “library” and “library or information research” are increasingly blurred.
- Millions of scholarly web sites have nothing to do with libraries.
- We should remember that most serious research necessitates utilization of a library’s databases as well as resources on the web.
