Western Kentucky University Lowell H. Harrison, 2021-12-14 Most Hilltoppers believe that Western Kentucky University is unique They take pride in its lovely campus its friendly spirit the loyalty of its alumni and its academic and athletic achievements But Western's development also illustrates a major trend in American higher education during the past century Scores of other institutions have followed the Western pattern growing from private normal school to state normal school to teachers college to general college finally emerging as an important state university Historian Lowell Harrison traces the Western story from the school's origin in 1875 to the January 1986 election of its seventh president For much of its history Western has been led by paternalistic presidents whose major battles have been with other state schools and parsimonious legislatures In recent years the presidents have been challenged by students and faculty who have demanded more active roles in university governance and by a Board of Regents and the Council on Higher Education which have raised challenging new issues Harrison's account of the institution's development is laced with anecdotes and vignettes of some of the school's interesting personalities President Henry Hardin Cherry whose chapel talks convinced countless students that the Spirit Makes the Master Uncle Ed Diddle whose flying towel and winning teams earned national basketball fame Daddy Burton who could catch flies while lecturing Miss Gabie Robertson who held students into the next class period the lone Japanese student who was on campus during World War II Harrison also recalls steamboat excursions the Great Depression and the Second World War the astounding boom in enrollment and buildings in the 1960s the period of student unrest and the numerous fiscal crises that have beset the school This is the story of an institution proud of its past and seeking to chart its course into the twenty first century Papers, 1915 In Place of Inter-State Retaliation William

Phelan, 2014-12-18 Unlike many other trade regimes the European Union forbids the use of inter state retaliation to enforce its obligations and rules out the use of common escape mechanisms such as anti dumping between the EU member states How does the EU do without these mechanisms that appear so vital to the political viability of other international trade regimes including the World Trade Organization How therefore is the European legal order with the European Court of Justice at its centre able to be so much more binding and intrusive than the legal obligations of many other trade regimes This book puts forward a new explanation of a key part of the European Union's legal system emphasising its break with the inter state retaliation mechanisms and how Europe's special form of legal integration is facilitated by intra industry trade parliamentary forms of national government and European welfare states It argues first that the EU member states have allowed the enforcement of EU obligations by domestic courts in order to avoid the problems associated with enforcing trade obligations by constant threats of trade retaliation It argues second that the EU member states have been able to accept such a binding form of dispute settlement and treaty obligation because the policy adjustments required by the European legal order were politically acceptable High levels of intra industry trade reduced the severity of the economic adjustments required by the expansion of the European market and inclusive and authoritative democratic institutions in the member states allowed policy makers to prioritise a general interest in reliable trading relationships even when policy changes affected significant domestic lobbies Furthermore generous national social security arrangements protected national constituents against any adverse consequences arising from the expansion of European law and the intensification of the European market The European legal order should therefore be understood as a legalized dispute resolution institution well suited to an international trade and integration regime made up of highly interdependent parliamentary welfare states
