

The life cycle of a wolf

A wolf's life cycle begins with the birth of a baby wolf, or pup. Pups are usually born in litters of two to seven wolves. The pups spend their first weeks of life in a den, or shelter, with their mother and littermates. They nurse, or feed on their mother's milk.

When they are a month old, the pups meet the rest of their pack. The pack feeds and protects the pups until they can fend for themselves. Some wolves stay with their pack for the rest of their lives, but others leave to join other packs or start packs of their own.
