I Live In The World:

A World to Live In George M. Woodwell, 2016-02-26 A scientist makes a powerful case that preservation of the integrity of the biosphere is a necessity and an inviolable human right A century of industrial development is the briefest of moments in the half billion years of the earth's evolution And yet our current era has brought greater changes to the earth than any period in human history The biosphere the globe's life giving envelope of air and climate has been changed irreparably In A World to Live In the distinguished ecologist George Woodwell shows that the biosphere is now a global human protectorate and that its integrity of structure and function are tied closely to the human future The earth is a living system Woodwell explains and its stability is threatened by human disruption Industry dumps its waste globally and makes a profit from it invading the global commons corporate interests overpower weak or nonexistent governmental protection to plunder the planet The fossil fuels industry offers the most dramatic example of environmental destruction disseminating the heat trapping gases that are now warming the earth and changing the climate forever The assumption that we can continue to use fossil fuels and adapt to climate disruption Woodwell argues is a ticket to catastrophe But Woodwell points the way toward a solution We must respect the full range of life on earth not species alone but their natural communities of plant and animal life that have built and still maintain the biosphere We must recognize that the earth's living systems are our heritage and that the preservation of the integrity of a finite biosphere is a necessity and an inviolable human right The World's Great Classics, 1899 Annual Report ... New England Society in the City of New York, 1924 Living Epistles, Or, Christ's Witnesses in the World Edward Hartley Dewart, 1878 Mindsponge Theory Quan-Hoang Vuong, 2023-01-13 Despite the remarkable cognitive power humans are not alien beings living in their isolated universe but part of the Earth's biosphere a dynamic intelligent system The working of the human mind and society is built upon and follows the principles of the natural world In today's modern society where technological advancement has significantly increased information accessibility to new knowledge social sciences can greatly benefit from discoveries in natural sciences In this book the latest findings in life sciences are used as evidence to demonstrate and explain the mechanisms of psychological and social information processes Mindsponge is a novel theory of information processing in the human mind The mechanisms of information processing are present in all levels of the natural world from ecological and physiological down to cellular and molecular As a subset of nature humans express these patterns in the way we think believe behave and establish social constructs By looking at the intelligent minds of nature a more accurate framework for human cognition can be logically derived The mindsponge theory reflects the physical chemical and biological laws upon the mental world not the other way around Throughout the book readers will find interesting often hilarious stories of both the natural and social world accompanied by clear scientific explanations and evidence Each story brings to the table yet another angle to look at the unified principle of information processing within the biosphere survive and thrive The book also provides original
