Fertilizer Policy in Africa Uma J. Lele, Robert E. Christiansen, Kundhavi Kadiresan, 1989 The removal of fertilizer subsidies and privatization of importation and distribution networks have been prominent features of recent policy reforms in MADIA countries to reduce budget deficits and the role of the public sector This paper reviews the reform policies implemented during the 1980s in the MADIA countries and their impact on the development of fertilizer use In particular it explores the supply and demand constraints that hinder the process of rapid growth and diffusion of fertilizer use This study recommends that 1 donors should undertake long term untied import support for fertilizers to promote sound intensification of fertilizer use on a sustained basis 2 food and fertilizer stocks be financed at the national and regional levels to encourage governments to remove intra and inter country restrictions on trade 3 improving the knowledge base on a location specific basis especially the relative role of fertilizers vis a vis other more complex resource management needs and 4 privatization offers great potential for improving fertilizer procurement and distribution

World Bank Assistance to Agriculture in Sub-Saharan Africa, 2007-01-01 Sub Saharan Africa is a critical development priority it has some of the world s poorest countries and during the past two decades the number of poor in the Region has doubled to 300 million more than 40 percent of the Region s population Africa remains behind on most of the Millennium Development Goals MDGs and is unlikely to reach them by 2015 With some of the world s poorest countries Africa is a development priority for the donor community A major drag on Africa s development is the underperformance of the critical agriculture sector which has been neglected both by donors and governments over the past two decades The sector faces a variety of constraints that are particular to agriculture in Africa and make its development a complex challenge Poor governance and conflict in several countries further complicate matters IEG has assessed the development effectiveness of World Bank assistance in addressing constraints to agricultural development in Africa over the period of fiscal 1991-2006

Reforming agricultural markets in Africa Kherallah, Mylene, Delgado, Christopher L., Gabre-Madhin, Eleni Z., Minot, Nicholas, Johnson, Michael, 2002-01-01 The long term reduction of hunger and poverty in Sub Saharan Africa remains one of the great challenges for the international development community Eliminating hunger and promoting widespread growth in the region inevitably involves agriculture given its central role in the region's economies Over the past 20 years most African governments have carried out reforms to deregulate agricultural markets and reduce the role of state enterprises How much has the state actually withdrawn from agricultural markets Have well functioning private markets emerged How successful were these reforms in boosting agricultural production economic growth and the incomes of the rural poor What lessons can we learn from the reform process The authors of this book address these questions through an analysis based on an extensive review of experiences with reform focusing on three major agricultural markets fertilizer food crops and export crops They examine the historical rationales for intervention the factors contributing to reform the process of implementation and the impact of the reforms on farmers and consumers in Sub Saharan Africa The authors find that reforms have had many favorable results but that the impact has been muted by partial implementation and structural constraints They propose a new agenda for promoting the development of agricultural markets in Sub Saharan Africa identifying areas where governments can play a supportive role They argue that appropriate agricultural marketing policies and investments can improve livelihoods and the economic health of the region global system Prevailing policies to integrate these economies more closely with the global economy are in the view of many misplaced and this work presents a series of alternative strategies that will tap the energies of the African people to develop their own potential and reduce their dependence on World Bank IMF led approaches Yield Gaps and Potential

Agricultural Growth in West and Central Africa Nin-Pratt, Alejandro, Johnson, Michael, Magalhaes, Eduardo, You, Liangzhi, Diao, Xinshen, Chamberlin, Jordan, 2011 West and Central African nations face major obstacles to achieving the Millennium Development Goal of cutting poverty and hunger in half by 2015 not least among them the fragile state of their agriculture Although most regional economies depend on agriculture for employment national income and export revenues farm productivity tends to be low owing to relatively little use of chemical fertilizers improved seeds and other modern technologies Yield Gaps and Potential Agricultural Growth in West and Central Africa responds to this problem by identifying potential areas of growth in the agricultural and livestock sectors Using data on the soil water availability and weather in different parts of West and Central Africa the authors find significant gaps in different locations between the potential and actual yield of various agricultural products They then use an economywide multimarket model to simulate the future economic effects of closing these yield gaps In coastal nations crops such as cassava cereals and yams have the greatest yield gaps whereas in the Sahel livestock rice coarse grains and oilseeds groundnuts have more room for growth Although identifying these yield gaps does not guarantee that they can be closed it does provide a focus for development efforts in the region The authors conclude moreover that if such efforts involve transnational cooperation in agricultural research marketing and other areas they could produce significant benefits across West and Central Africa This study s findings will be of interest to policymakers researchers and others concerned with African development
