The Development of Social Engagement Peter J. Marshall, Nathan A. Fox, 2005-12-29 The Development of Social Engagement edited by Peter J Marshall and Nathan A Fox brings together some of the latest research on social engagement processes across a range of life stages and species The opening chapters provide overviews of cutting edge research on social engagement in areas such as temperament face processing joint attention language development and early social cognition in humans Subsequent chapters address questions related to biological determinants of social systems play and maternal behavior across a variety of species as well as evolutionary issues associated with social engagement Finally a number of chapters examine the application of rigorous biologically focused research paradigms to the study of atypical social engagement in children Atypical social engagement is framed in terms of disorders such as autism and Williams Syndrome as well as in the effects of adverse early rearing environments such as institutions This volume will be a valuable guide for those interested in a neurobiological approach to the study of social development It provides an introduction to current research directions in this rapidly expanding field for both student and professional researchers in developmental psychology comparative psychology and developmental psychopathology

What makes written words so special to the brain? Gui Xue, Urs Maurer, Mohamed L Seghier, 2015-01-22 Reading is an integral part of life in today's information driven societies Since the pioneering work of Dejerine on word blindness in brain lesioned patients the literature has increased exponentially from neuropsychological case reports to mechanistic accounts of word processing at the behavioural neurofunctional and computational levels tapping into diverse aspects of visual word processing These studies have revealed some exciting findings about visual word processing including how the brain learns to read how changes in literacy impact upon word processing strategies and whether word processing mechanisms vary across different alphabetic logographic or artificial writing systems Other studies have attempted to characterise typical and atypical word processes in special populations in order to explain why dyslexic brains struggle with words how multilingualism changes the way our brains see words and what the exact developmental signatures are that would shape the acquisition of reading skills Exciting new insights have also emerged from recent studies that have investigated word stimuli at the system network level by looking for instance at how the reading system interacts with other cognitive systems in a context dependent fashion how visual language stimuli are integrated into the speech processing streams how both left and right hemispheres cooperate and interact during word processing and what the exact contributions of subcortical and cerebellar regions to reading are The contributions to this Research Topic highlight the latest findings regarding the different issues mentioned above particularly how these findings can explain or model the different processes mechanisms pathways or cognitive strategies by which the human brain sees words The introductory editorial summarising the contributions included here highlights how varieties of behavioural tests and neuroimaging techniques can be used to investigate word processing mechanisms across different
