Wiseman, 1856    The Dublin Review, 1855    The Limits of History Constantin Fasolt, 2013-09-03 History casts a spell on our minds more powerful than science or religion It does not root us in the past at all It rather flatters us with the belief in our ability to recreate the world in our image It is a form of self assertion that brooks no opposition or dissent and shelters us from the experience of time So argues Constantin Fasolt in The Limits of History an ambitious and pathbreaking study that conquers history's power by carrying the fight into the center of its domain Fasolt considers the work of Hermann Conring 1606-81 and Bartolus of Sassoferato 1313-14-57 two antipodes in early modern battles over the principles of European thought and action that ended with the triumph of historical consciousness Proceeding according to the rules of normal historical analysis gathering evidence putting it in context and analyzing its meaning Fasolt uncovers limits that no kind of history can cross He concludes that history is a ritual designed to maintain the modern faith in the autonomy of states and individuals God wants it the old crusaders would have said The truth Fasolt insists only begins where that illusion ends With its probing look at the ideological underpinnings of historical practice The Limits of History demonstrates that history presupposes highly political assumptions about free will responsibility and the relationship between the past and the present A work of both intellectual history and historiography it will prove invaluable to students of historical method philosophy political theory and early modern European culture
