In The Hood:

Hospice in the Hood Tia Rees, 2016-06-17 Knowing the lyrics to a Stevie Wonder song sealed the deal for one of Tia Rees's hospice patients and his mother. Their surprise at a white nurse knowing such things is a daily fact of life for Tia, who tries to provide top notch care for her African American patients even though it involves travel through tough inner city streets and rough neighborhoods. Gunshots, gangs, violence, guns, drugs, poverty, and racial tensions provide the backdrop for stories about her patients and their families. Hospice in the Hood covers three years of Tia's latest job taking care of hospice patients and her stories range from stolen moments of laughter to the final breaths of a patient. Read about relatives who are startled by and sometimes admire her sharply dressed security men, poignant celebrations, quiet moments with her charges, and sometime unsettling encounters with neighborhood residents. The riots in Ferguson, Missouri, brought a new note to the conversations Tia had with patients and their families when they confronted their deepest feelings about race. As their situation grows worse and hopelessness sets in, she and the families she serves develop close relationships. Tia also shares moments of insight gleaned from conversations with her dying patients in their final days and their struggle to cope with pain. In the end, she finds it is the small things that can sometimes make the biggest difference, such as the music that ties her to her patients, providing a bridge between cultures with toe tapping tunes, moving melodies, and lyrics of love. Where the Hood At? Michael C. Lens, 2024-11-13 Substantial gaps exist between Black Americans and other racial and ethnic groups in the U.S. most glaringly, Whites across virtually all quality of life indicators. Despite strong evidence that neighborhood residence affects life outcomes, we lack a comprehensive picture of Black neighborhood conditions and how they have changed over time. In Where the Hood At, urban planning and public policy scholar Michael C. Lens examines the characteristics and trajectories of Black neighborhoods across the U.S. over the fifty years since the Fair Housing Act. Hip hop music was born out of Black neighborhoods in the 1970s and has evolved alongside them. In Where the Hood At, Lens uses rap's growth and influence across the country to frame discussions about the development and conditions of Black neighborhoods. Lens finds that social and economic improvement in Black neighborhoods since the 1970s has been slow. However, how well Black neighborhoods are doing varies substantially by region. Overall, Black neighborhoods in the South are doing well and growing quickly. Washington, D.C. and Atlanta, in particular, stand out as centers of Black affluence. Black neighborhoods in the Midwest and the Rust Belt, on the other hand, are particularly disadvantaged. The welfare of Black neighborhoods is related not only to factors within neighborhoods, such as the unemployment rate, but also to characteristics of the larger metropolitan area, such as overall income inequality. Lens finds that while gentrification is increasingly prevalent, it is growing slowly and is not as pressing an issue as public discourse would make it seem. Instead, concentrated disadvantage is by far the most common and pressing problem in Black neighborhoods. Lens argues that Black neighborhoods represent urban America's greatest policy failures and that recent housing policies have only had mild success. He provides several suggestions for policies with the goal of uplifting Black neighborhoods One radical proposal is enacting policies and programs such as tax breaks for entrepreneurs or other small business owners that would encourage Black Americans to move back to the South Black Americans migrating South would have a better chance at moving to an advantaged Black neighborhood as improving neighborhood location is higher when moving across regions It would also help Black Americans expand their political and economic power He also suggests a regional focus for economic development policies particularly in the Midwest where Black neighborhoods are struggling the most One way to boost economic development would be to move federal agencies to the area He also calls for building more affordable housing in Black suburbs Black poverty is lower in suburbs than in central cities so increasing housing in Black suburbs would allow Black households to relocate to more advantaged neighborhoods which research has shown leads to improved life outcomes Where the Hood At is a remarkable and comprehensive account of Black neighborhoods that helps us to better understand the places and conditions that allow them flourish or impedes their advancement
