Berry, U.S. Navy, Commanding California Academy of Sciences, 1881 On July 8 1879 the USS Jeannette left San Francisco under the command of Lieutenant George Washington De Long Its mission was to try to reach the North Pole via an ice free polar sea that some geographers theorized might exist The ship entered the Arctic Ocean on August 29 on September 6 it became stuck in pack ice north of the Chukotka Peninsula and began drifting in a northwesterly direction On January 19 1880 the ship began leaking as it was crushed by the ice With great effort the crew managed to save the vessel as it continued to drift in the vicinity of Wrangel Island The Jeannette finally sank on June 12 1881 At about that time the U S Navy dispatched the USS Rodgers on a mission to the Arctic to search for the Jeannette and for two missing American whalers A converted whaling steamship the Rodgers was especially equipped to operate in the Arctic and was acquired by the Navy specifically for the purpose of this search The Rodgers never found the Jeannette or the whalers and it was forced to abandon its mission in November 1881 after a disastrous fire in its hold The mystery of what happened to the Jeannette ultimately was solved when several members of the ship's crew made it to a settlement on the Lena River in September 1881 from where they continued on to the town of Yakutsk Most of the crew of the Jeannette perished either at sea or by exposure and starvation on the north coast of Siberia Presented here is the Proceedings of the California Academy of Sciences for its regular meeting on June 6 1881 ten days before the Rodgers departed for the Arctic The meeting featured a reception for Lieutenant Robert M Berry commander of the Rodgers and several papers or extracts from papers on Arctic related subjects by members of the academy Nature Magazine , 1925 An illustrated monthly with popular articles about nature The Century , 1917 Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine ... , 1917 Proceedings of the California Academy of Natural Sciences , 1881 Scribner's Monthly Josiah Gilbert Holland, Richard Watson Gilder, 1917 Hornaday's American Natural History William Temple Hornaday, 1927 House documents , 1889 A Wild-animal

Nearest the Pole Robert E. Peary,2022-12-30 Excerpt When an expedition starts for distant and mysterious regions for an uncertain length of time and particularly when its objective point is the frozen heart of the Arctic Circle it is natural that those who know and are interested in its objects and plans should turn with interest to its personnel and its surroundings and environment while en route to the scene of action The opening scenes of an Arctic voyage are comparatively familiar to those conversant with Arctic literature The main features of the play are much the same A crowded and littered ship regrets at leaving confusion and if the weather be decent an effort to get into shape or if the weather be bad a surrender by most of the party to abject misery in cramped quarters In the present instance some of these features were entirely absent and others appeared only in a mild form Experience and a roomy ship almost completely obviated the lumbering of the decks beyond the inevitable and inseparable feature of the coal a portion of which must at first always be carried on deck Such few things as were dumped on deck at the last moment were quickly and readily disposed of and quarters specially arranged for the party and on deck insured fair room for each member of the expedition
