Individual Differences In Posttraumatic Response Problems With The Adversity Distress Connection:

individual Differences in Posttraumatic Response Marilyn L. Bowman, 2013-05-13 This book challenges the assumptions of the event dominated DSM model of posttraumatic stress disorder Bowman examines a series of questions directed at the current mental health model reviewing the empirical literature She finds that the dose response assumptions are not supported the severity of events is not reliably associated with PTSD but is more reliably associated with important pre event risk factors She reviews evidence showing the greater role of individual differences including trait negative affectivity belief systems and other risk factors in comparison with event characteristics in predicting the disorder The implications for treatment are significant as treatment protocols reflect the DSM assertion that event exposure is the cause of the disorder implying it should be the focus of treatment Bowman also suggests that an event focus in diagnosis and treatment risks increases the disorder because it does not provide sufficient attention to important pre existing risk factors

Anxiety Disorders in Adults Peter D. McLean, Sheila R. Woody, 2001-01-04 Recently developed psychosocial treatments for anxiety disorders reflect the systematic influence of scientifically generated knowledge and these new treatments yield strong results Research in such areas as information processing cognition behavioral avoidance and the physiological components of anxious arousal has increased our knowledge of mediators that cause and maintain anxiety disorders The development of these new clinical tools is timely as epidemiological studies now show that up to 25% of people will experience at least one anxiety disorder in their lifetime Meanwhile mental health care providers are increasingly pressured to limit the number of sessions and use demonstrably effective treatments In this book the authors review psychosocial treatments for anxiety disorders focusing on the scientific basis and demonstrated outcomes of the treatments Cognitive behavioral therapies are highlighted as they have been the most frequently investigated approaches to treating anxiety disorders Individual chapters feature specific phobias social phobia panic disorder and generalized anxiety disorder The book is rich in clinical material and integrates science and clinical practice in an effort to help practitioners to improve the effectiveness of their work with anxious clients      California School of Professional Psychology Handbook of Juvenile Forensic Psychology Neil G. Theodore D. Wachs,Robert R. McCrae,Geldolph A. Kohnstamm,2001-03-01 Although the importance of context has been emphasized by temperament researchers until now there has been remarkably little systematic research on the unique role specific aspects of context play in the development and impact of temperament The goal of this volume is to systematize current knowledge and theory on the role played by specific aspects of context in the etiology expression and influence of temperament particularly for those aspects of temperament that are most likely to relate to later personality traits Reflecting the editors view that the interface between temperament and context is a bidirectional phenomenon this volume focuses on two broad issues 1 How does context moderate the expression continuity or consequences of individual differences in introversion extraversion sociability emotionality and inhibition the I ESEI family of traits 2 How do individual differences in the I ESEI family of traits moderate the nature of characteristics of the individual s context By bringing together outstanding international researchers who present their current research and theories the editors systematize research contributions in the domain of contextual contributions to the I ESIA family of traits and set the agenda for future research directions
