Pangle,2020-04-17 The oeuvre of the Greek historian Xenophon whose works stand with those of Plato as essential accounts of the teachings of Socrates has seen a new surge of attention after decades in the shadows And no one has done more in recent years to spearhead the revival than Thomas L Pangle Here Pangle provides a sequel to his study of Xenophon s longest account of Socrates the Memorabilia expanding the scope of inquiry through an incisive treatment of Xenophon s shorter Socratic dialogues the Economist the Symposium and the Apology of Socrates to the Jury What Pangle reveals is that these three depictions of Socrates complement and in fact serve to complete the Memorabilia in meaningful ways Unlike the Socrates of Plato Xenophon s Socrates is more complicated and human an individual working out the problem of what it means to live well and virtuously While the Memorabilia defends Socrates by stressing his likeness to conventionally respectable gentlemen Xenophon s remaining Socratic texts offer a more nuanced characterization by highlighting how Socrates also diverges from conventions of gentlemanliness in his virtues behaviors and peculiar views of quotidian life and governmental rule One question threads through the three writings Which way of life best promotes human existence politics and economics that of the Socratic political philosopher with his philosophic virtues or that of the gentleman with his familial civic and moral virtues In uncovering the nuances of Xenophon s approach to the issue in the Economist Symposium and Apology Pangle s book cements the significance of these writings for the field and their value for shaping a fuller conception of just who Socrates was and what he taught Gender, Work, and the Transition to Modernity in Northwestern Europe, 1720-1880 Maria Ågren,2025-01-22 It is well known that gender distinctions structure the modern labour market but why is this so and how far back in time does the pattern extend Gender Work and the Transition to Modernity in Northwestern Europe 1720 1880 uses a unique method to map and explain how gender rather than marital status came to be important Gender Work and the Transition to Modernity in Northwestern Europe 1720 1880 investigates how and why the division of work between men and women changed in the transition from early modern to modern society Based on the verb oriented method and around 19 000 observations of work activities in historical sources its focus is on a mid Swedish local society in the period 1720 to 1880 There were several continuities across this time both women and men were observed in practically all forms of work many households both affluent and destitute still relied on multiple sources of income and the marital partnership continued to be important for what women and men did to support themselves Yet there was also change tasks that conferred authority were gradually masculinised the differences between married and unmarried women with respect to work declined and while women remained mobile men s work related mobility increased In an even longer time perspective from 1550 to 1880 gender slowly became more important for what types of work people did The main reason behind this development was increasing social differentiation and shifts in labour relations The growing impact of gender was not the result of a trickling down of new middle class ideals nor the effect of new preferences nor a consequence of a separation of home and work Instead differences grew because more people were in a position where someone else an employer controlled how they used their time

Category and Concept Development : Making Sense of the Blooming, Buzzing Confusion David H. Rakison Assistant Professor of Psychology Carnegie Mellon University, Lisa M. Oakes Associate Professor of Psychology University of Iowa, 2003-01-09 Whether or not infants earliest perception of the world is a blooming buzzing confusion it is not long before they come to perceive structure and order among the objects and events around them At the core of this process and cognitive development in general is the ability to categorize to group events objects or properties together and to form mental representations or concepts that encapsulate the commonalities and structure of these categories Categorization is the primary means of coding experience underlying not only perceptual and reasoning processes but also inductive inference and language The aim of this book is to bring together the most recent findings and theories about the origins and early development of categorization and conceptual abilities Despite recent advances in our understanding of this area a number of hotly debated issues remain at the center of the controversy over categorization Researchers continue to ask questions such as Which mechanisms for categorization are available at birth and which emerge later What are the relative roles of perceptual similarity and nonobservable properties in early classification What is the role of contextual variation in categorization by infants and children Do different experimental procedures reveal the same kind of knowledge Can computational models simulate infant and child categorization How do computational models inform behavioral research What is the impact of language on category development How does language partition the world This book is the first to address these and other key questions within a single volume The authors present a diverse set of views representing cutting edge empirical and theoretical advances in the field The result is a thorough review of empirical contributions to the literature and a wealth of fresh theoretical perspectives on early categorization The Warm Wonderful World of
