

Chapter 1

Information Systems in Global Business Today

1. How are information systems transforming business and what is their relationship to globalization?

Describe how information systems have changed the way businesses operate and their products and services.

Wireless communications, including computers and mobile hand-held computing devices, are keeping managers, employees, customers, suppliers, and business partners connected in every way possible. Email, online conferencing, the Web, and the Internet, are providing new and diverse lines of communication for all businesses, large and small. Through increased communication channels and decreased costs of the communications, customers are demanding more of businesses in terms of service and product, at lower costs. E-commerce is changing the way businesses must attract and respond to customers.

Identify three major new information system trends.

Three information system trends that are influencing the way businesses interact with employees, customers, suppliers, and business partners include emerging mobile digital platforms, growth of online software-as-a-service, and the growth of cloud computing.

Describe the characteristics of a digital firm.

- Significant business relationships with customers, suppliers, and employees are digitally enabled and mediated.
- Core business processes are accomplished through digital networks spanning the entire organization or linking multiple organizations.
- Key corporate assets – intellectual property, core competencies, and financial and human assets – are managed through digital means.
- They sense and respond to their environments far more rapidly than traditional firms.
- They offer extraordinary opportunities for more flexible global organization and management, practicing time-shifting and space-shifting.

Describe the challenges and opportunities of globalization in a “flattened” world.

Customers no longer need to rely on local businesses for products and services. They can shop 24/7 for virtually anything and have it delivered to their door or desktop. Companies can operate 24/7 from any geographic location around the world. Jobs can just as easily move across the state or across the ocean. Employees must continually develop high-level skills through education and on-the-job experience that cannot be outsourced. Business must avoid markets for goods and services that can be produced offshore much cheaper. The emergence of the Internet into a full-blown international communications system has drastically reduced the costs of operating and transacting business on a global scale.

2. Why are information systems so essential for running and managing a business today?

List and describe six reasons why information systems are so important for business today.

Six reasons why information systems are so important for business today include:

- (1) Operational excellence
- (2) New products, services, and business models
- (3) Customer and supplier intimacy
