IMPLEMENTING EARLY INTERVENTION: FROM RESEARCH TO EFFECTIVE PRACTICE, Donna M. Bryant and Mimi A. Graham (Eds.), New York: The Guilford Press, 1993, 358 pp.

Reviewed by: Jean M. VanHecke

Implementing Early Intervention is a comprehensive resource for administrators, researchers, practitioners, and those who train interventionists of any discipline. The book is broad in scope, covering everything from the historical development of early intervention to funding sources, population prevalence, and implications for research. The editors have included chapters from leading experts in the field, with thoughtful discussions about making early intervention programming cost effective, comprehensive, and sensitive enough to impact significantly the children and families served. Topics covered include discussion of eligibility for services, models of service delivery, screening, assessment (and appropriate instruments for both screening and assessment), family assessment, family-centered programming, intervention strategies for infants and toddlers, funding of services, inclusion (including infants and toddlers with disabilities with typical peers and community experiences), and policy considerations. The impact of Part H of Public Law 99-457, re-authorized as the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), which mandates family-focused services and coordination of existing resources for services to the birth-to-3 population, is a major underlying theme throughout the book and drives several discussions.

The book is written for professionals and students in early intervention, an interdisciplinary field with broad social policy and educational implications. The authors organized the book into 15 chapters, and the intent of each chapter is to provide the research or theoretical basis of the topic, a brief discussion of major issues, provide guidelines for translating research into practice, and give best practice examples. Each chapter also identifies challenges that remain to be addressed. The text may seem unmanageable to professionals within the disciplines represented in early intervention who are not familiar with the field. Those who are familiar with early intervention will appreciate the comprehensiveness of the approach. Several chapters reviewed below may be of special interest to infant mental health professionals.

There are excellent recommendations for best practice in the chapters "Characteristics of Quality, Effective Delivery Systems for Children with Special Needs" and "Models of Service Delivery" by the editors, Donna Bryant and Mimi Graham. Both are helpful in getting an overall feeling for how most early intervention programs operate. "Creating Family Centered Programs" by Donna Wells and Latinde is a good "how-to" chapter for family-centered programming, assessment issues, and service provi-
